Coach Tarrant retires

As this issue was going to press, Coach Dick Tarrant, the winningest coach in UR basketball history, announced his retirement at a news conference in the Robins Center.

Tarrant, who guided the Spiders to five NCAA and four NIT appearances in his 12 years as head coach, said he was "retiring as basketball coach but not from basketball." He would pursue other options, he said.

Tarrant's record at UR was 239-126. He had eight 20-win seasons. In the NCAs, Tarrant's teams beat Charles Barkley's Auburn, Bob Knight's Indiana, Georgia Tech and Syracuse. Look for a story in the next University of Richmond Magazine. RF

A New Home for the ARTS

By Barbara Fitzgerald

"Is it possible to be a fine liberal arts college without a great arts center?"

Dr. Charles Johnson, chairman of the University's art department, poses the question and quickly answers it.

"No," he says emphatically, "it's not possible to be first class when art is a secondary discipline. A significant insight is always missing when the arts are not a primary part of the program."

That "significant insight" is about to be added to the University's program in an important and substantial way.

On Jan. 26 at "An Evening Celebrating the Arts," President Richard Morrill announced to 200 trustees, associates and a number of other UR friends and supporters the University's plans for a $16 million arts complex to be developed on the Westhampton campus. This complex, the president said, will bring facilities for the arts to the level of those already available in leadership, law, science, math and computer science, athletics and other departments.

"We have the Gottwald Science Center,"

Dr. Morrill said, "the Robins Center, the recent law school addition. Last fall we added The Jepson School of Leadership Studies on the Richmond College side of the campus and now we will be adding a central academic facility, the arts center, to the historic Westhampton campus. Now is the time for the arts."

In addition to the construction of one striking new building, the complex will utilize two standing Westhampton buildings, the Modlin Fine Arts Center and the former athletic sections of the Keller Hall complex. Both Modlin and Keller have served as the University's arts center at various times in the institution's history.

From its construction in 1935, Keller Hall housed, off and on, the University's music and art departments, until the long-awaited completion of the Modlin Fine Arts Building in 1968. Now both of these historic buildings — all of Modlin and part of Keller — have been incorporated into the design of the new arts complex and given a revitalized role as the University moves toward another century.

The new building, shaped around an open courtyard and sculpture garden, will, like the Modlin building and the Keller complex, feature the University's signature Collegiate Gothic architecture.

Designed by Richmond architects Marcellus Wright Cox & Smith, the building offers a number of interesting and unusual design elements, such as three towers, a porticulis, a balcony, a drive-through archway, spires, a courtyard, and numerous gables and dormers, as well as some of the most beautiful tiles and ornaments to be found on the UR campus.

The new structure will house a 500-seat theatre and exhibition spaces for the visual arts. The theatre and art programs will move from Modlin to the new quarters, while music and speech will share renovated space in the present fine arts building. The music library, however, will be housed in a new tower to be built over Keller Road. With this complex, the University expects to move quickly to the top tier of collegiate arts facilities and programs.

For Dr. Johnson and a number of his colleagues in art, music, speech and theatre, the benefits of an arts complex are both practical — new classrooms, new offices, new studios, more space, more students — and philosophical.

For some "oldtimers" on the faculty, the construction represents the capstone in an ongoing, subtle shift in University priorities. It is clear, they say, that you can't transform one whole side of the Westhampton campus into a $16 million arts center without making a statement about the changing role of the arts in the life of the University.

"Some very positive changes have been taking place here in the last few years," says Johnson. "With the addition of a number of very distinctive faculty members, improved teaching loads, curriculum development, new travel budgets, the core course, and The Jepson School of Leadership Studies, this University is well on its way to becoming the first-class academic community that has been envisioned for so long.

"The arts center is an extension of everything else that's going on, and in a holistic sense, it will definitely define the University in a new way."

For arts faculty and students, the improved status comes not a moment too soon. Most of the classes, studios, and labs for art, music, theatre and speech have long been crowded into the 25-year-old Modlin Fine Arts Center, which also houses the University's Marsh Gallery and Camp Theatre.

Since the Modlin building opened in 1968 as the very first facility on campus to be used exclusively for study of and training in fine arts, facilities in several of the arts departments have more than doubled. Student interest in the arts has grown correspondingly, and technological and space needs have far outgrown the building's capabilities.

The art department outgrew the Modlin building some years ago and has been scattered about the campus ever since. The department has recently added some outstanding new faculty, but there is no room for the programs to grow.

For Sheila Dawson, a first-year student from Powhatan, Va., the overcrowding has been frustrating. "I came here thinking that I might possibly major or minor in art," she says, "but I couldn't get in an art class this year. They all filled up before I got here."

Miss Dawson will try again next year, but at this point the difficulty may affect her choice of major; she's also considering Spanish. "I definitely still want to take some art classes, though," she says. "I love drawing, and art is a big interest of mine."

Whatever she majors in, Virginia Baptist Scholar Sheila Dawson is the kind of student who will surely benefit greatly from the new arts center. She's a member of the University choir and is frequently in attendance at plays and art exhibits on campus.

Thanks to the talents and hard work of Richard Waller, the director of the Marsh Gallery, art exhibits at the University over the past few years have been critically acclaimed. But the best possibilities have been frustrated by lack of space and other problems.

"Let's face it," says Charles Johnson. "Nobody would ever have loaned us a major Rembrandt. We've had nowhere to hang it, no way to display it, and no adequate security for it."

Similarly, Broadway hasn't been hankering to play the Camp Theatre either. The University Players have been performing on a stage that's often too small, with no space available for the building or movement of sets.

Dr. Jack Welsh, R'60, theatre professor and director of the University Players, recalls a recent visit from a contingent representing the UR housekeeping staff. "They were letting me know," he says, "that every time they got the Camp Theatre auditorium sparkling clean, my students and I managed immediately to lay on another layer of dust."

"I had to tell them," he says, "that when we have to build our sets on the stage, in the wings, and even out in the house itself, sawdust is something we all have to live with."

Welsh also has been living with more serious problems. Once he had a student actor break a foot on a mad dash down the back stairs in an attempt to get from one side of the stage to the other. "There's no crossover behind the stage," Welsh points out.

"We've had to improvise and to create devices to get around the inadequacies of the present building, but some problems can't be overcome by ingenuity," he says.

"You can't imagine the hours and days and months of wasted time because of space conflicts. And, sometimes, there are visions that simply can't be realized, not because you don't have the talent or the time, but simply because you don't have the facilities."

Suzanne Bunting, W '58 and chair of the music department, shares Welsh's space problems and his frustrations. For years she could only dream of a concert hall with excellent acoustics, one available to her department and its students on demand.

"Even though we'll be staying in the same building," says Bunting, "the changes for us will be considerable. We'll have a sufficient number of classrooms and adequate rehearsal space. We'll no longer have to work around the theatre's schedule, and we'll end up with a larger stage, a permanent shell, and far better acoustics."

With more than 500 UR students enrolled in some type of music course, and with large numbers of outside visitors coming in for concerts ("We've filled up Camp Theatre twice this semester," Bunting points out), her department has "long been in trouble for space."

Elaine Bowen, a music major and a senior from Richmond, says space is so scarce that "people of any size have a hard time fitting between the piano and the wall in some of the tiny practice rooms."

"And," she adds, "once they're in, they may or may not find a piano good enough to practice on." Bowen, who hopes to become a professional singer after graduation, says that even the mirrors needed by voice students to practice are hard to find in the present building.

Come 1995 when the construction and renovation are completed, these kinds of problems will be solved. The music department will end up with some new instruments and equipment and with at least twice as much space. In fact, the total space dedicated to all the arts on campus will be doubled.

For Dr. Jerry Tarver, head of speech communication, the other program currently housed in Modlin Hall, the changes will be less dramatic but no less welcome. For one thing, Tarver will no longer have to share his office with another professor. Also, a new computer network will allow the speech faculty and staff to share files and have access to common data.

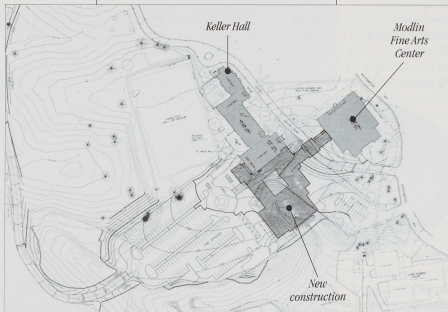

Perhaps the most important benefit for speech students is that, with a new videotaping system for the department, they will at last be able to tape their own speeches, to help perfect their delivery and spot mistakes before they make presentations in class.

"The changes for us will not be vast," says Tarver, "but what is done won't be just cosmetic, it will be functional. And when it's completed, we'll all be able to do our jobs better." With 140,000 square feet of space, including a new 500-seat theatre and a renovated 700-seat music performance hall, the complex is designed to meet educational, physical, and performance goals for all four programs, as well as to considerably enhance exhibition capabilities for the art department and the University's gallery.

In addition to the Modlin renovations, portions of the Keller Hall complex will also undergo changes, to accommodate an experimental theatre and student art gallery. The gymnasium will be renovated to create extensive studio space for drawing, painting, sculpture, ceramics, photography and printmaking. An art history classroom with appropriate video equipment will also be provided, as will new space for a slide library and a resource library.

"The Keller gymnasium was the center of Westhampton College activities for many years," President Morrill pointed out in his

Site plan showing existing buildings and new construction arts center announcement, recalling ring dances and big band concerts and basketball games that took place there in other times.

"It is highly appropriate," he said, "that this space be reserved, transformed, and once again brought to the forefront of campus life and attention, to assume new duties and serve students and faculty for many decades yet to come."

One of the most visible features of the arts center will be a Gothic tower, home to the new and expanded music library. The tower will bridge Keller Road and link the new quadrangle and the Modlin Fine Arts Center. An architectural counterpoint to the tower on North Court, the arts complex tower will add to the balance of Westhampton Green.

Though various departments will be moving, the arts complex will allow all the fine arts programs to continue to be together, basically under one roof. Art activities never possible before will now be available to all, and majors in art, music, speech and theatre will enjoy increased opportunities to create and perform. In addition, students in the dance program will be able to perform in the new theatre.

Welsh sees this new facility as an opportunity for another "golden age" in his department. "We had eight or 10 years, right after the Modlin building opened," he recalls, "that I've always characterized as theatre's golden years on this campus. I'm expecting that to happen again, hoping for it, working toward it."

According to the arts faculties, the music, art, and speech and theatre departments have had remarkable input into the design and function of the new arts complex. "I have never seen better communication at this University than in the planning of this project," says Tarver. "We have been kept up-to-date every step of the way."

"Dr. Morrill came to us," says Charles Johnson, "and asked, 'What kind of program do you envision? What are your needs and aspirations?' And when you see the plans for the arts center, it's obvious that he listened."

It's also obvious that Morrill had a dream of his own: to build a facility that would enrich the lives of not just UR arts majors, but the entire student body; not just the academic community, but the city of Richmond as well.

"The arts represent one of the central methods in our educational repertoire to

History of the arts at the University: Art

When Dr. Charles Johnson came to UR in 1967 as chairman, he was the art department's only full-time person. Besides Johnson, Jeanne Campbell, first appointed in 1944, continued teaching part-time until she became a full-time faculty member in 1970. Her retirement marked 40 years of service.

Johnson has taught about everything there is to teach in art. Today, he has five full-time colleagues who not only are respected as scholars and artists, but also are a most collegial group, according to Johnson.

"I never thought [the department] would be as good as it is. The faculty are highly dedicated people who love what they do, and they do it well," Johnson says.

The current faculty follow in the tradition of Johnson, Campbell and the remarkable Pauline Turnbull, who from 1930 to 1960 was assistant and then associate professor of art history, as well as Latin. Miss Turnbull came to Westhampton in 1916 as secretary to Dean May Keller and assistant registrar. Miss Turnbull also was secretary of the faculty and treasurer of Phi Beta Kappa, and somehow found time to get her master's degree from the University of Pennsylvania in 1929.

The current art department also owes its beginnings to a remarkable artist, Theresa Pollak, W'21, who in 1931 was appointed to teach classes in drawing and painting. In 1928, she also started the first art classes at Virginia Commonwealth University, then Richmond Professional Institute.

The most recent addition to the current faculty is Tucker-Boatwright Professor Dr. Steven Addiss, who had served as chair of the art history department at the University of Kansas, where he began and developed the best graduate program in the country in the history of Japanese art.

He joins such colleagues as painter Ephraim Rubenstein; sculptor Mark Rhodes; art historian Dr. Margaret Denton Smith; and Richard Waller, who was chief designer at the Brooklyn Museum, the sixth largest in America, and who has made UR's Marsh Gallery one of the best in the city.

Majors at UR can specialize in art history or studio art; and the department is moving toward a concentration in museum studies, a program that could help students become curators and gallery directors. RF

History of the arts at the University: Music

In 1953 UR President George M. Modlin hired a young Ph.D. fresh out of Indiana University to begin a "real music department" at the University. Although the music major had had a long history at UR, with such noted faculty members as F. Flaxington Harker, Hilton Ruffy and Hannah Coker, there never had been a department.

Dr. Modlin's choice, Dr. John White, proved to be "the right person at the right time in the musical life of Richmond" — in the city as well as at the University, according to the department's current chair, Suzanne Bunting.

White built the department with such faculty as Bunting, Dr. James Erb and Dr. Fritz Neumann, one of the biggest names in musicology and a winner of two Guggenheims. White also helped begin the Richmond Symphony; and from his post as music critic for the Richmond Times-Dispatch, he served as perhaps the most important voice for music in the community.

In addition, "he was the best teacher I ever had," says Bunting, who was a student here when White was hired.

"He put the department on the map locally," Erb says. White began free afternoon Sunday concerts which drew large audiences to the campus. Continuing that tradition are current-day programs such as the UR-sponsored Carpenter Center programs and the performances of the internationally-renowned Shanghai Quartet, according to Erb, the first faculty member White hired.

Although White left in 1961, Erb stayed, becoming an influence on students in five different decades. He is known as "Mr. Choral Music" in the city, with his acclaimed work with CAFUR and the Richmond Symphony Chorus.

As the department grew, the University next provided a building for the arts, the Modlin Fine Arts Center, in 1968. That commitment to move from Keller Hall into quarters suitable for the arts "represented music and arts taking a place among the other academic disciplines," Erb says, a commitment renewed in 1986 with the addition of a fine arts graduation requirement, and the decision this year to build the new fine arts center.

"Music is changing more than any single field," Bunting says. To keep up with these changes, the department has hired impressive young faculty members like Dr. Michael Davison, who has made a name in the city with his jazz combo, Late 4 Breakfast.

Dr. Fred Cohen, another young faculty member, is knowledgeable about computer music technology and its impact on composition, performance and teaching. His contemporary music group CURRENTS is well known in the area.

In the new fine arts building, the University's high technology equipment will find ample space to be used in classes and in performances.

And the tradition of community music performances will be continued in a 700-seat concert hall that will be one of the area's finest. RF touch and transform the lives of students," Morrill said at the announcement.

"Our new facilities will represent no new venture in professional training in the arts, but will extend our reach in liberal education. Happily, the arts center offers as well additional opportunities for the University to enrich the artistic life of the Richmond community and provides new ways we might interact with arts organizations in the area."

Once the arts center is completed, artistic activity will certainly be positioned to more fully benefit and influence UR's entire educational program. The academic community at large will benefit from first-class exhibits, traveling programs, visiting lecturers, performers and artists.

And the city of Richmond and nearby counties will benefit from a new cultural outlet, an entertainment facility in the west end of the city, with easy access and free parking, to complement the facilities and programs now available only downtown.

Arts and sciences dean Dr. David Leary points out another advantage: the arts themselves will benefit. If students like those at the University of Richmond don't learn to appreciate the arts and become patrons of the arts, he asks, who will?

"We are right now educating the next generation of art lovers and supporters," says Dean Leary, "and it is upon them that the future of the arts may rest."

Leary expects the impact of the arts center, once completed, to be immediate and widespread.

"In a very real way," he says, "the arts are the heart of an educational institution — they bring the community together and provide opportunities for new experiences. For the sake of lifelong learning and personal growth, it is critical that students come to appreciate the arts."

"Thoughtful reflection is, after all, a crucial part of learning, as well as a distinctive trait of human life; and it is the arts that continually pose questions, register concerns, sharpen our consciousness and challenge our senses."

"I expect the challenge — and pleasure — of the arts to increase significantly on our campus when the new arts complex opens."

Barbara Fitzgerald is a Richmond area free-lance writer.

History of the arts at the University:

Speech & theatre

Some sort of speech training probably always has been at the University.

The Mu Sigma Rho and Philologist Societies, founded before 1847, were prestigious organizations fostering camaraderie and debate. In 1890 the University established a "School of Elocution," later "School of Expression," and hired L.R. Hamberlin, Richmond College class of 1884 and a noted platform speaker, as elocution instructor.

Intercollegiate debate began for Richmond College probably by 1899, and in 1902 Richmond College defeated Wake Forest in a contest in Raleigh, N.C.

The debate team began to travel outside the region during the 1930s, and eventually faculty members such as Dr. Spencer Albright, professor of political science, coached the teams. In 1953, James Golden became the first speech professor to be paid as debate coach.

Although students in 1903 began an organization called "The Dramatic Club of Richmond College," it wasn't until Westhampton College was founded that plays were produced and the University Players was born. A Miss Brown directed the group prior to 1934.

Productions were done in the Jenkins Greek Theatre and in the old playhouse on Boatwright hill. When it burned down in 1951, shows were presented "arena style" in Keller Hall and then in the Quonset Hut, which became University Theatre. In 1968, the University Players moved into the James L. Camp Memorial Theatre in the new Modlin Fine Arts Center.

In 1935, Alton Williams, known affectionately to generations of students as "Prof.," came to UR after receiving a master's degree at UNC. His first production was "The Devil and the Cheese," for which he built the sets from the scraps of the demolished Red Cross building at Westhampton.

In the early years he was assisted by Richard L. Scammon, an excellent actor, and later Elizabeth Apperly, the great lady of the Richmond theatre. A native of Ireland, Mrs. Apperly traveled extensively with the Abbey Theatre under Lady Gregory and with the Irish Players.

Scammon also taught speech and puppetry. After Scammon, Mrs. Apperly taught a speech class with heavy emphasis on "polished language."

By 1942, the department of dramatic arts and speech was one of the first coed departments on campus.

At the urging of Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman, the first radio courses were taught, and their vogue lasted throughout the 1950s.

In 1964 Dr. Jerry Tarver, the current chair of speech communication and theatre arts, was hired. He is a nationally recognized authority on speechwriting and has been a consultant to a large numbers of companies, including Kodak, AT&T, a U.S. Senate committee and the Pentagon.

Dr. Jack Welsh, who also has been chair of the department, returned to his alma mater to teach in 1965. Welsh's influence has been felt not only on his own students and players but on local high school students all over the city through the University Players' Theatre in the Morning performances. RF

Architectural Challenge

Design had to bring arts together, link new and existing space

By Mary Beausoleil

Ask Eddie Smith to describe the biggest challenge in designing the University of Richmond's new arts center, and he will name two: the "mundane" one, and the "real" one.

"The mundane one was getting all the floor levels right," he says. "But that's of no interest to anyone but us, the architects."

"The real challenge — the exciting one — was packing all the arts, and all those who practice and teach them, together in the same building, giving everybody what they need — and making some very interesting spaces in the process."

Eddie Smith is Edward A. Smith III, the partner in charge of design at Marcellus

Wright Cox & Smith, the Richmond architectural firm that planned the new arts complex.

Existing arts facilities are overcrowded, scattered and inadequate, says Dr. Richard Morrill, UR's president. He ticks off the new buildings that have given other campus programs state-of-the-art space.

"Now is the time for the arts," he says. "They are a vital and integral part of our whole program."

The new complex, a $16 million project on the Westhampton campus, will be made up of a new addition and renovations to the

The centerpiece of the new arts facility is the courtyard, shown above in two views, into which lobbies for the new main theatre, the studio theatre and the main gallery all open. Above right is the new entrance from the Keller side of the complex.

Cross section of the new main theatre

Modlin Fine Arts Center and parts of the Keller Hall complex. It will total 140,000 square feet of new and renovated space. Construction will begin this summer; it is scheduled for completion in 1995.

The renovated Modlin building will be devoted to music and speech communication. Camp Theatre will become a new music performance hall, and the rest of the building will be classrooms, practice rooms, offices and studios. Speech facilities in Modlin will include videotaping capability.

The renovated part of Keller Hall will contain studio space for drawing, painting, sculpture, ceramics, photography and printmaking. The former pool area will become a 125-seat experimental theatre and student art gallery.

The new construction will feature a 500-seat theatre, a museum-quality exhibition gallery and two smaller galleries. They will be built around a courtyard, the "spiritual center of the new arts village," in Morrill's words. As his choice of the word "village" implies, the complex will bring individuals together in spaces that encourage intimacy and mingling.

The lobbies for the new main theatre, the studio theatre, and the main gallery all will open onto the courtyard. "When active things are happening, they're here," Smith says.

A new tower and arcade will do more connecting work, linking Modlin to the new theatre and Keller. The tower will also house a new music library.

Why renovate? One often hears that it is better to build from scratch and design the space you need than to try to work around the space needs of an earlier age. (Keller was completed in 1936, Modlin in 1969.) Some builders will even say it is cheaper to tear down and start from scratch.

But that doesn't apply to this type of construction, says Louis Moelchert Jr., UR vice president for business and finance. All-new construction would have been too expensive and too wasteful of the existing buildings.

Charles Piper, the project architect in charge of coordinating the work, agrees.

"We had here two older buildings, gradually going out of service but still good solid buildings," he says. "Re-use of these buildings was a key to affording this project. The renovation is a surgical exercise, not a hatchet exercise. It is a major issue of the next century — to preserve quality such as this."

By renovating, the $16 million cost of the project will be kept to between one-half and two-thirds of what all-new construction would have cost, Piper says.

The complex will also make economical use of the grounds. Part of the new construction will be built down into a gully, a site unlikely to see any other use. (That's one reason that getting all the floors coordinated was so challenging. Another is that Keller and Modlin are at different elevations.)

The new complex will fill modern needs and incorporate the latest technology. But it will also reach back to the past, to some of the ideas of the college's original architect, Ralph Adams Cram of Boston, who in 1910 envisioned the campus as a series of quadrangles.

Cram and his firm — Cram, Goodhue and Ferguson — were the most important Gothic revivalists of their day. Cram loved craftsmanship and attention to detail, and hated the loss of hand-made quality in machine work. The Collegiate Gothic style he brought to UR and other colleges was modeled on English campuses and typically included a series of quadrangles, towers and courtyards.

He designed six buildings that were built at UR by 1914, and the style he began was continued by other architects. But some of what he started was deemphasized over the years — his use of courtyards and humor, for example.

The L-shape of the new complex will mirror the L-shape of North Court and bring greater definition to the quadrangle on the Westhampton campus. (Jepson Hall, completed last year, "revived" the quadrangle on campus.)

The new cloistered courtyard at the heart of the arts center will continue a return to that kind of figural open space, which Cram loved but which his successors at UR tended to use less.

The humor revival will continue, too. "The original buildings contain lots of humorous touches," Smith says. For example, Cram was fascinated by owls, and he included offbeat renderings of them in some of the details of his buildings.

"Those guys knew how to have fun," Smith says. "But over the years the humor was dropped — Modlin is an example. There needs to be something a little eccentric" — what he calls "funky details."

The new tower bridging Keller Road, which will house the new music library

Humor is also one of the trademarks of Marcellus Wright Cox & Smith. The Making of Virginia Architecture, a book published recently by the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, notes that the firm's work combines "historical recall" and a respect for the environment with a "witty irreverence."

The "lopsided arch" of The E. Claiborne Robins School of Business building is one example of that irreverence. Funky birds, echoes of Gram, are others.

A sketch of the courtyard for the new arts center shows more. At the top of the columns, two men are doubled over beneath the weight of their load. What a delightful reward for careful looking! And they won't be the only such touches.

Views of the new south entry from the parking lot

The vision of what the new arts center will be exists for now in architects' and artists' drawings and models, delightful in themselves.

A watercolor rendering by Thomas Schaller (see front cover) is widely admired for its use of techniques and colors associated with the American Brandywine school of illustration, practiced by such artists as Maxfield Parrish, Howard Pyle and N.C. Wyeth. It will probably find a permanent home on campus.

The arts center will be the eighth major UR project designed by Marcellus Wright Cox & Smith. "This one somehow has grabbed our imagination the most," Smith says.

"It combines all the things an architect can do — enrich an existing context, like that of the Westhampton campus; create very special new spaces, such as the courtyard in the arts center; and help programs grow."

Mary Beausoleil is a free-lance writer based in Richmond.

Named areas in the new arts facility

Areas of the arts center will be named for certain individuals and foundations who have made major contributions to the new facility. At press time, they include:

The Katherine Sergeant Newby Art Gallery
a gift from Katherine Sergeant Newby and her husband, Dr. W. Edward Newby, both alumni

Feature of the arts center (to be selected) named for The E. Rhodes and Leona B. Carpenter Foundation a gift of $500,000 given by the foundation, presented by Myron H. "Bud" Rinehart, foundation director

The Mary Morton Parsons Foundation Music Library a gift of $1 million from the foundation

The Clinton Webb Fine Arts Tower named for Clinton Webb, R'29 and H'82, who made a personal gift and has been active in securing foundation gifts

The Lora and Claiborne Robins Courtyard named for Mr. and Mrs. E. Claiborne Robins, R'31 and H'60, who gave $3 million

Feature of the arts center (to be selected) named for Robert and Alice Jepson Robert S. Jepson Jr., B'64, GB'75 and H'87, and his wife, Alice, gave $5 million

Individuals from the University's past who will have areas of the facility named for them are:

Fanny Graves Crenshaw
a wing of the building, which will contain the Studio Theatre, and the new entrance on the south side of the wing

Robert T. Marsh Jr.
music practice rooms

Dr. Emily Gardner, W'18

Transformations

As the University evolves, existing space finds new use

Once a library, now the home of the English department.

Once a men's dining room, now a stately meeting room for alumni and other groups.

Once a women's dining room, now an elegant recital hall.

These are a few examples of change in the ways space has been used at the University since the campus was first occupied in 1914. A study of the changes reveals how the University's vision has evolved, as new buildings are built for growing programs and older buildings are given new life.

The new arts center will transform the Westhampton campus, bringing a new look to parts of the Modlin Fine Arts Center and the Keller Hall athletic area. A theatre will become a concert hall, and a gymnasium will become studio space.

These adaptations are only the most recent ones as the University's story unfolds. DW

Transformations

The original Richmond College dining area in Sarah Brunet Memorial Hall, shown above in 1969, is now a meeting room used by alumni and other groups.

Built as a dining room for Westhampton College, this area is now the North Court Recital Hall.

Puryear Hall was the chemistry building in 1943; now it's the home of the modern foreign languages department.

The gymnasium in the Keller Hall complex, shown in 1947, will become art studio space in the new arts facility.

Media videotape as Candida Ewing Steel argues for Dr. Mudd, with attorney F. Lee Bailey on her left, in the law school's new moot courtroom.

Dr. Samuel Mudd's name "cleared" after defense by F. Lee Bailey

After more than 125 years, Dr. Samuel A. Mudd, the physician named a conspirator in the Lincoln assassination, finally has had his name cleared.

On Feb. 12, Lincoln's birthday, a three-judge panel handed down a verdict in The T.C. Williams School of Law's moot courtroom that unofficially erased Dr. Mudd's conviction in 1865: that the military commission that convicted him had no right to try him in the first place.

Attorney F. Lee Bailey, who defended Dr. Mudd, told the mock court that his client's "prosecution was one sledgehammer after another upon the Constitution."

Robinson O. Everett, the chief judge, and Judge W. Thompson Cox III ruled that Dr. Mudd was entitled to a civilian trial. Everett is a retired senior judge of the U.S. Court of Military Appeals. Judge Cox sits on that same court.

The third judge, Edward D. Re, retired senior judge of the U.S. Court of International Trade, was the only one to address Mudd's guilt or innocence. Judge Re said he did not think "an impartial military panel distanced from the moment" would have found him guilty.

Bailey's co-counsel was attorney Candida Ewing Steel, who represents the Mudd family today and who is the great-great-granddaughter of the lawyer who defended Dr. Mudd in 1865.

She argued that the Civil War had ended with Lee's surrender to Grant five days before the assassination and hence a military court had no jurisdiction.

"We gave Dr. Mudd the appeal he never got in 1865," said John Paul Jones, professor of law at the University of Richmond and organizer of the moot court.

"To make this possible we created something that did not exist in 1865," said Jones. "We created an appeal to a 'Special Court of Military Review' supposedly created by an Act of Congress. The date of our moot court hearing was presumed to be Feb. 12, 1867."

While the decision of the moot court will not be binding, the review of Dr. Mudd's case was the most thorough ever conducted, Jones said.

It also will put pressure on the Secretary of the Army to clear Mudd's name officially, according to Joseph D. Harbaugh, dean of the law school.

Dr. Mudd, a Maryland physician, was sentenced to life in prison after he treated Lincoln's killer, John Wilkes Booth, for a broken leg in the hours following the shooting of the president at Ford's Theater in Washington.

Dr. Mudd always maintained his innocence of ties to the Lincoln conspiracy, as have his descendants over the years.

Dr. Mudd was found guilty by a military court known as the Hunter Commission 128 years ago.

Dr. Samuel Mudd

Around the Lake

Representing the U.S. Army in the moot court appeal was John Jay Douglass, dean of the National College of District Attorneys in Houston and a former commandant of the Army Judge Advocate Generals School.

His co-counsel was John S. Jenkins, associate dean at the George Washington University National Law Center and former judge advocate general of the Navy.

Eight UR law students combed through the 4,000-page transcript of the Hunter Commission's proceedings as well as other sources to produce 50-page briefs for the Army and the defense as well as a bench brief for the judges.

Bailey argued that the Hunter Commission was "set up to satisfy the monumental embarrassment of lax security that allowed the President of the United States to be assassinated by an amateur."

While the University of Richmond's court may have been moot, the point of Dr. Mudd's guilt or innocence is not—at least not to the Mudd family.

About 15 descendants of Dr. Mudd attended the UR proceedings, including Dr. Richard A. Mudd of Saginaw, Mich.; Dr. Mudd's grandson; and Emily Mudd Rogerson, 86, of Richmond, Dr. Mudd's granddaughter.

"My grandfather never got a fair trial, so this is a great day," Mrs. Rogerson said.

Dr. Mudd's descendants had pressed vigorous efforts over the years to have their ancestor's name cleared of conspiracy charges. In July 1991, for example, the Department of the Army denied a recommendation of the Army Board for Correction of Military Records (ABCMR) that Dr. Mudd's name be cleared on the grounds that the military commission which tried Dr. Mudd had no jurisdiction over civilians.

In denying the recommendation of the Army Board last year, William D. Clark, acting assistant secretary of the Army, said, "even if the issue might be decided differently today, it is inappropriate for a non-judicial body, such as ABCMR, to declare that the law 127 years ago was contrary to what was determined contemporarily by prominent legal authorities."

The University of Richmond's moot court was held in the 230-seat moot courtroom in its new law school wing. In addition two adjacent rooms with seating for another 160 were fitted with large-screen TVs to see the proceedings. Ticket demand was so high, the law school had to hold a lottery.

The hearing was videotaped for possible broadcast on PBS. National media, including The New York Times, The Baltimore Sun, The Detroit News and the Associated Press covered the appeal. The event also was reported on National Public Radio and CBS News. RF

Justice Scalia speaks at law school dedication

Associate Justice Antonin Scalia of the U.S. Supreme Court was the keynote speaker during dedication ceremonies for additions and renovations to The T.C. Williams School of Law on Oct. 23, 1992.

Justice Scalia spoke about the U.S. Constitution and the danger of taking it for granted.

"The Constitution will endure only to the extent that it endures in your understanding and affection," he said, adding that "a Supreme Court fiercely dedicated to preserving that document cannot exist in a society that does not understand it."

Justice Scalia received an honorary degree from T.C. Williams following his address. After the ceremony, Scalia greeted students and guests informally at a reception.

Earlier in the day, Justice Scalia met with a class in property law, challenging them to debate him on a 1992 Supreme Court case for which Scalia had written the majority opinion.

Dedication events began earlier in the month with the annual scholarship luncheon Oct. 9. At the luncheon, the William Green Award was presented to Erwin N. Griswold, dean emeritus of the Harvard Law School and former solicitor general of the United States.

Griswold was the keynote speaker at the October 1954 dedication of the original law school building on campus.

Study carrels in the new law library provide each student with personal work space and instant electronic access to legal information.

The Hon. Kenneth W. Starr, current solicitor general of the United States, was the inaugural speaker for the Austin Owen lecture on Oct. 12. His topic was "Tolerance and Accommodation of Religious Expression in Modern America."

The lecture series was given in honor of the Hon. Austin E. Owen, U.S. circuit court judge of the Second Judicial Circuit in Virginia Beach from 1974 until his retirement in 1990, by his daughter Dr. Judith Owen Hopkins, W'74, and her husband, Dr. Marby B. Hopkins III, R'74.

On Oct. 22, Robert MacCrate spoke at the Legal Forum on the development of legal education. MacCrate is chair of the American Bar Association task force on law schools and the legal profession, and a former president of the ABA.

Other activities included the annual Fall Gathering, held this year for the first time at the law school in order for alumni to tour the new and renovated sections of the building. DW

Law professor Jones helps write democratic constitution for Albania

Constitutional law scholars generally spend their time talking about constitutions.

It isn't often that they get an opportunity to write one, although that is precisely what T.C. Williams School of Law professor John Paul Jones did.

Jones served as an unpaid volunteer — and the only Western adviser — to an Albanian committee drafting a democratic constitution for that former communist nation.

He visited Albania twice — the first time, in late 1992, for a month — to help craft a constitution and a bill of rights.

He came away with a very clear view of a very confusing situation in a country that was the most isolated and most strictly controlled of any nation behind the Iron Curtain. The small, mountainous nation of 3 million on the Adriatic Sea emerged from more than four decades of communist rule in 1992 after a grassroots revolt and free elections.

The constitutional committee included four young members with Western leanings and one elderly law professor who was a longtime insider of the communist government before being "rehabilitated" in a concentration camp. It was a perfect reflection of the current political culture in Albania, Jones says.

"On the one hand, there is a group of young, Westernized constitutionalists, who are ardent admirers of the U.S. Constitution, particularly because it embodies the doctrine of separation of powers and the doctrine of judicial enforcement of human rights," Jones says.

"On the other hand is the older generation that is trapped by the history of their whole adult life under a socialist regime. The older generation opposed the old regime for its human rights excesses and for its destruction of the economy, but it knows no other way of thinking except authoritarian centralized planning. It just doesn't understand participatory government."

Sticking points within the committee included such taken-for-granted American liberties as freedom of the press and freedom of public assembly.

"These two groups do not think the same way," Jones says. "Communication is very difficult between them."

The opportunity for Jones to assist in this historical endeavor arrived, by fax, last September.

In late summer, the Albanian government contacted the American Bar Association seeking help from the ABA's Central and Eastern European Legal Initiative (CEELI) project.

The ABA, in turn, faxed the request to law schools around the United States, seeking volunteers. T.C. Williams dean Joseph D. Harbaugh received the fax and asked Jones if he were interested. He was.

Jones went to Washington for an interview with CEELI officials and was given the assignment.

Going into the project, Jones' knowledge of Albania was limited. But once he arrived in Tirana, the capital city, he received an eyeeful of a nation grappling with an assortment of enormous problems, any one of which could snuff out the glimmering hopes for democracy.

Foremost was the economy, which was in terrible shape, with runaway inflation, little industry and massive unemployment.

Jones says that Albania is such a pitifully poor nation that Albanians "lucky enough to get a visa consider it a vacation in the lap of luxury to go to Bulgaria, because it is much more advanced as a consumer culture. These guys are 40 years behind Yugoslavia."

The economy desperately needed foreign investment, but no one was willing to invest any capital until the issue of private ownership is resolved, which would require a constitution, and that, at press time, was hung up amid political bickering. BL

Gorbachev will speak at UR on April 11

Former Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev will visit the University on April 11, Easter Sunday.

Gorbachev will interact with students, attend a reception and deliver a public address that night, according to preliminary plans. His visit is sponsored by The Jepson School of Leadership Studies and the Student Speakers Board.

Gorbachev will be in Richmond for an appearance at the Richmond Forum on April 10. His visit follows a semester that saw the University host a presidential debate and campus visits by Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf and Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia. RF

CEO salaries are excessive, says Judith Richards Hope

Judith Richards Hope, board member of some of America's biggest corporations, trial lawyer and self-described "Washington hired gun," says she would tie the salaries of American CEOs to a multiple of the salary of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Furthermore, she believes when the shareholders lose, so should the CEO.

Hope expressed those beliefs before UR faculty, students, administrators and Richmond business leaders in February as Manville Executive-in-Residence at The E. Claiborne Robins School of Business.

She told her audience she believes executive compensation should be much more closely tied to ownership in the company. "In fact," she said, "I'd push profit sharing and stock options down through the employee ranks."

Hope, a partner in the Washington office of the international law firm Paul, Hastings, Janofsky & Walker, speaks with some authority. She has been on the boards of six publicly traded corporations in the last 15 years. She currently is a director of IBM, General Mills Inc., the Union Pacific Corp. and the Budd Co.

She also serves on the Harvard Corp., the oldest corporate body in the Western hemisphere. The president and fellows — there are only six fellows, and she one of them — are responsible for every area of America's oldest college. When Hope was appointed in 1989, she became the first woman to sit on the board in Harvard's then-354-year history. She still is the only woman member.

Hope's speech was entitled "The Changing Corporate Board: Toward the Next Millennium." When she selected the topic, she said, she "did not imagine in [her] wildest dreams the earthquakes that have hit corporate America in the last few months. . . . Heads are rolling and, rightly or wrongly, boards are increasingly viewed as the executioners."

Hope argues that CEOs are one of the excesses in corporate America, she believes, especially when highly paid CEOs are presiding over companies that are losing money.

"I wouldn't pay a CEO obscene amounts of cash salary as if he/she were a rock star or a basketball player," she said. "Instead, we could develop a kind of benchmark or multiple of, say, an absolutely objective standard of what the cash compensation portion of overall compensation should be. . . .

"The biggest part of executive compensation, in my view, should be tied to stock. Managers who make hundreds of millions, or billions, for the shareholders should have their own personal share in that pot of gold. But they surely should not win big while the shareholders are losing big."

She had a few things to say about directors as well. "I think the events of the last few months demonstrate how aggressive and decisive boards can be when they need to be. Some probably waited too long, but turning the battleships of these huge corporations is a slow process, and rightly so," she said.

"For better or for worse . . . corporate directors have assumed the role of crisis managers in our basic industries," Hope concluded. "We [directors] need to be diligent, attentive and plenty tough. We need to work harder and faster for less cash. . . . And I wouldn't be a CEO these days for anything in the world." RF

Debate work gets students chance to help NBC News again at inauguration

In the last few months, sophomore Scott Klein has found out what it's like to be behind the scenes with the NBC News crew. Last fall, he worked as a runner during the presidential debate at UR and in January, he helped the NBC crew at the inauguration of President Bill Clinton.

"All the different networks had runners for the debate," Klein says. "Whatever needed to be done, that's what the runners did."

After working the debate, Klein and senior David Conry, another debate runner, decided to visit the NBC studios in Washington, D.C., for a reunion.

"The producers said, 'We are short-handed. We need runners again. Would you like to work the inauguration?'" Klein recalls.

Klein and Conry said yes. They left for Washington the day before the event.

"NBC had their production booth on top of the Department of Labor building," Klein says. He worked with Bryant Gumbel, Katie Couric and Tom Brokaw.

"I worked the door when they were on the air. I was doing the same sort of things that I did during the debate — escorting guests to the production booth, carrying people to their hotels, and so on."

Klein says he was with the news crew when President Clinton was sworn in and

Following are only a few of the numerous professional activities in which University faculty and staff have been engaged this fall and winter.

Anthony Russell, English, gave a presentation entitled "Dante's Vision of the Eaten Heart: Consuming the Text and the Poetics of Spirit," at the Modern Language Association meeting in New York in December. Russell also presented "The Poetics of Conception in Sidney and Berni" at the 16th Century Studies Conference in Atlanta in October.

Daryl Cumber Dance, Jessie Ball duPont Visiting Scholar in English, has had several publications. Her book, New World Adams: Conversations with Contemporary West Indian Writers, was published in England in 1992 by Peepal Tree Press, and a paper, "He's Long Gone: The Theme of Escape in Black Folklore and Literature," appeared in The New Cavalade: African American Writing from 1760 to the Present.

Among other activities, she chaired a panel discussion on "Stories of American Identities" at the conference "500 Years After the Columbian Encounter" at the University of Virginia in October.

Also in the English department, Suzanne Jones presented a paper entitled "Reconstructing Southern Readers: What do Iser and Bakhtin Have to Do With It?" at the Modern Language Association convention in New York in December; and Dona Hickey had her book entitled Developing a Written Voice published by the Mayfield Publishing Co. in October.

W. Harrison Daniel, history, also had a book published. Entitled History at the University of Richmond, it is an account of the origin, growth and development of the University's department of history. It was published in 1991.

Raymond M. Dominey, chemistry, received a grant from the Thomas F. Jeffress and Kate Miller Jeffress Memorial Trust to support his project "Big Molecules on Small Instruments." Also receiving a grant was William G. Shanabrook, biology, for his project "Identification and Characterization of DNA Damage-Inducible Genes in Saccharomyces cerevisiae."

Sheila Carapico, political science, has been named Fulbright Scholar to Yemen.

Jimmy Kande, also in political science, presented a paper entitled "Anomalies of the Democratic Transition in Sierra Leone," at the meeting of the African Studies Association in Seattle in November.

Don Pate, health and sport science, presented a paper, "Current Trends in Use, Design/Construction, and Funding of Sport Facilities," at the International Sport Summit conference in Los Angeles in January.

In the business school, Phillip A. Jones Sr., accounting, had an article entitled "Accounting Education Through the Eyes of Two Professors — Subject Content" published in the October issue of Disclosures.

Dana-Nicoleta Lasco, marketing, gave a presentation entitled "Japanese Strategic Alliances in the U.S.: Effects on Brand Image" with Terry Weisenberger, also in marketing, at the annual meeting of the Southern Marketing Association in New Orleans in November.

Lasco also co-authored a paper, "The Development of Consumer Desires in Marketing and Developing Economies: The Cases of Romania and Turkey," that was presented at the annual meeting of the Association for Consumer Research in Vancouver in October and also published in Advances in Consumer Research.

James Schweikart, accounting, was the American Accounting Association representative to a meeting on developing accounting and reporting standards for global use at the Meeting of World Accounting Standards Setters in Norwalk, Conn., in October. Among his many other activities, he was moderator of a session on accounting education at the seventh International Conference on Accounting Education in Arlington, Va., in October.

Law professor Gary Leedes was heard nationally when a lengthy (12 minutes) interview with him on the topic of presidential pardons was aired on National Public Radio's "Morning Edition" on Christmas morning.

Okaner Christian Dark, law, gave a presentation, "Integrating Issues of Poverty and Class into First Year Torts and Upper Level Torts Classes," at the annual meeting of the Association of American Law Schools in San Francisco, in January.

Also at the meeting she served on a panel to discuss "Model Anti-Harassment Policies for Law Schools" for the Women in Legal Education section and presented "Teaching

Because he worked behind the scenes, Klein has some classic inside memories. He laughs when he recalls how Katie Couric came into the booth after she had finished the "Today" show and talked to the producer in her perky "Valley Girl" voice. And how, after the debate, Tom Brokaw jokingly scolded Klein for eating his Doritos.

While he was in Washington, Klein also attended the Youth Inaugural Ball at the Old Post Office Pavilion, where groups like Boyz II Men were performing.

Klein, who is a business major, says he would consider switching careers if NBC offered him a full-time position.

University Players present world premiere with playwright Mark Harelik

Not only did the University Players perform a world premiere play this winter, they also worked on a daily basis with the playwright to help him refine the script.

The play was "What the Jews Believe," and the playwright was Mark Harelik, who was on campus as a Tucker-Boatwright artist-in-residence.

"What the Jews Believe," staged Feb. 25-28, is a fictional continuation of the play, "The Immigrant," also written by Harelik, which the University Players produced during 1991-92. Harelik says the plays have to do with communities within communities and the basic human need to belong.

"Sometimes the desire to enter into fellowship or belonging results in setting people apart," says Harelik. "It can complicate a person's search for identity."

In addition to the experience of working with a playwright, the University Players also learned first-hand how a script develops. Harelik rewrote portions of the play as the University Players rehearsed it.

According to Harelik, sometimes a script works the first time an actor performs it. In other cases, the script needs clarification and development.

"The play only in part exists on the written page," says Harelik. "The actors are the final authority, as they bring life to the written page and make the play grow."

Harelik asked the students for their input on the script throughout the rehearsal process.

"The students had a great deal of influence on the script," he says. "The script we started with is not at all the one we ended with."

Harelik says he chose the University as the site for the world premiere of his play because of the academic setting. The workshop environment allowed him to experiment with a new script. He also found it very gratifying to work with the students.

Harelik has appeared in more than 100 plays as a member of both San Francisco's American Conservatory Theatre and the Denver Center Theatre Co. He has played six leading roles at Los Angeles' Mark Taper Forum, twice in plays he authored. "The Immigrant" has received over 50 productions throughout the United States and has also been produced in Germany.

Also on campus as artists-in-residence were actress Nancy Boykin, W'72, and her husband Daniel Kern, West Coast actor and director. Kern was director of "What the Jews Believe," and Boykin had a role in the play.

Boykin has a long list of credits, beginning with lead roles in performances with the University Players 20 years ago. Most recently she has appeared in "Brighton Beach Memoirs" and "The Riding Club," and has had television appearances in "Highway to Heaven" and "Life Goes On." She also is an instructor at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts West.

Kern's career has included numerous awards for directing and acting in lead roles at the American Conservatory Theatre, the South Coast Repertory Theatre and the Alabama Shakespeare Festival. He also has appeared as a guest star in "L.A. Law," "Picket Fences" and "Star Trek" in addition to being a professor on the theatre faculty at Cal State Fullerton. KU

Visiting professor Ibrahim brings Middle East emphasis Moawiyah M. Ibrahim, Fulbright Scholar in Residence at the University this year, believes there's great potential for UR to widen its program on the Middle East.

"Maybe UR might like to consider a regular program on Middle East studies," he says.

Hosted by the UR office of international education, Ibrahim has been at UR since last August and he hopes to teach a summer course before returning to Jordan this August.

Rami, the professor's son, is a second-year student at UR but the rest of Ibrahim's family is back home in Jordan. And being away from his family and his students is difficult, he says.

Ibrahim is an archaeologist professor at the Institute of Archaeology and Anthropology of Yarmouk University, Irbid, Jordan.

"I have a few graduate students that I supervise [in Jordan]. Now we do things by mail. I got back once on a short trip for the graduation of three of them."

Nevertheless, Ibrahim says he's enjoying every minute he spends in America.

"I've been traveling around many places giving guest lectures on various campuses. I enjoyed San Francisco and the West Coast," he says.

In his work at UR, Ibrahim presents the cultures of the Middle East to students and faculty.

"Last semester I taught a course on the highlights of major stages of development in the Middle East," he says.

In his international studies senior seminar, Ibrahim shows students how Americans are viewed through Middle Eastern eyes.

"We talk about American food, friendship, humanitarian aspects and superpowers. This is something that has never been taught elsewhere," he says. "We know that Americans have written about how they view the Middle East, but not the other way around."

Ibrahim also is working with 12 UR faculty colleagues who are studying Islamic texts in preparation for teaching them next year in the core course, Exploring Human Experience.

"I am also learning about other aspects of Western civilization and I will be taking that back to my classes," he says.

Ibrahim is a graduate of the Free University of Berlin in archaeology and languages of the Near East. At Yarmouk University he has served as dean of the faculty of arts, humanities and social studies, and as director of the Institute of Archaeology and Anthropology.

He has led a number of excavations and field projects in Jordan and other Arab countries. The results of his research have appeared in many books, journals and other publications. JE

Winter speakers discuss Russia, Black history, the South

Below is a list of selected speakers and events on campus this winter.

■ Tolstoy return visit

Tatyana Tolstaya lecture, "Russia in 1993: A Writer's View," Jan. 19. Tolstaya was a writer-in-residence at the University of Richmond in 1988.

■ Black history celebration

Among events scheduled for Black History Month at UR during February were the following lectures:

Dr. Edgar A. Toppin, professor of history and dean of the graduate school of Virginia State University, on "Martin Luther King Jr.: From Frederick Douglass to Malcolm X," Jan. 19;

Nikki Giovanni, a poet, activist and author, on "Giving Something Back and the Power of Each Individual to Make an Impact," Jan. 27;

Patricia Russell-McCloud, lawyer and former FCC division head, "Vision 2000: Celebrate the Difference," Feb. 3;

Dr. Robert Gooding-Williams, chair of African American studies and associate professor of philosophy at Amherst College, on "Rodney King, Racial Ideology and the L.A. Uprising," Feb. 11;

Ama Ata Aidoo, Ghanaian playwright, poet and novelist, on "Images of Africa at Century's End," Feb. 18. Aidoo spent a semester at UR in 1989 and now is a visiting professor of English at Hamilton College; and Emma Coleman Jordan, professor of law at Georgetown Law Center and president of the American Association of Law Schools, Feb. 26.

Other events included film showings, comedians, concerts, exhibits and forum discussions.

■ History lecture

Douglas Southall Freeman Lecture, "Regional Claims and National Purposes: The South and the New Deal," by Dr. Dewey W. Grantham, Holland N. McTyeire Professor of History Emeritus of Vanderbilt University, Feb. 2. Grantham is in residence this spring as Douglas Southall Freeman Professor of History.

■ Religion lecture

Dr. Michael E. Stone, NEH Distinguished Visiting Professor of Religion at UR this year, on "The Dead Sea Scrolls and Ancient Jewish Literature," Feb. 8.

■ W. Allan Powell Lecture

Dr. Nicholas J. Turro, William P. Schweitzer Professor of Chemistry at Columbia University, on "Photoreactions of Organic Molecules Adsorbed on Zeolitic Molecular Sieves," Feb. 12.

■ Experimental film with introduction by artist

In conjunction with the Marsh Gallery's exhibition, "Charles Ritchie: The Interior Landscape," a showing of three contemporary films and discussion by Charles Ritchie on the influence of the filmmakers' work on his art, Feb. 18.

Films screened were "Fire of Waters," by Stan Brakhage; "The man who could not see far enough," by Peter Rose; and "Wavelength," by Michael Snow. Sponsored by the Marsh Gallery. LE

Presidential debate at UR made television history

The Oct. 15, 1992, presidential debate at the University's Robins Center may have been the most-watched show in TV history, according to John Gaffney, senior vice president and national media director at Arnold Fortuna Lawner & Cabot Advertising in Boston. The UR debate drew an audience of 56,139,000 households, according to research by Nielsen Television Index. The debate numbers do not include viewers from PBS and C-SPAN.

The second most-watched event, with 50,150,000 households, was "M*A*S*H: Goodbye, Farewell and Amen" on Feb. 28, 1983. Seven of the top 10 most-watched television shows of all time were Super Bowls. DW

Football players and coach win post-season honors

Despite its season coming to an end, the accolades for the University of Richmond football team have continued to roll in.

After finishing the season with a 7-4 record, its best since 1987, both players and coaches have continued their success off the field by being named to different All-America teams.

Eric Johnson

Senior linebacker Eric Johnson is leading the pack in awards won. For the third consecutive season Johnson led the conference in tackles, with 173. He also totaled seven quarterback sacks, forced four fumbles, recovered three fumbles and had two interceptions.

To honor his numbers, Johnson was named First Team All-State, First Team All-American by the Walter Camp Foundation, First Team All-American by the Sports Network and Second Team All-American by the Associated Press.

The offense last season was led by junior quarterback Greg Lilly, who led the league in passing efficiency and set a new Richmond record for total passing yards in a season.

Lilly was a finalist for the Dudley Award, which is given to the top college football player in Virginia. He finished third in the voting, trailing only Emory & Henry College's Cary Perkins and the University of Virginia's Chris Slade.

Lilly was also named First Team All-State and was an honorable mention by The Sports Network.

In addition to being named Yankee Conference coach of the year, Jim Marshall was named Division I-AA Coach of the Year by the Touchdown Club.

Marshall was a main reason why Richmond turned its record around. He helped lead the Spiders to a national ranking and a five-game improvement on last season's record, which was the best in school history.

Sophomore defensive back Scott Burton was named to the GTE University Division Academic All-District III football team. Burton led the Spiders in interceptions and is now eligible for Academic All-American honors.

Recounting the list was junior wide receiver Rod Boothes, who set a school record with 1,115 receiving yards and 10 touchdowns last season. For his accomplishments, Boothes was named a Third Team All-American by the Associated Press.

Senior athlete Marasia competes for Rhodes

A senior varsity athlete advanced last fall to the second stage of competition for a Rhodes Scholarship.

Jennifer Marasia, W'93, a cross country runner and economics major from Kingsport, Tenn., was one of five students nominated by the University to compete for the scholarships. Marasia was selected for a December interview at the state level in Tennessee.

Applicants for the Rhodes Scholarship apply either in their home state or in the state in which they attend college, according to Dr. Ray Wingrove, professor of sociology and director of UR's Rhodes Scholarship committee.

Each state may send two candidates to regional competition; finally, each of eight regions may recommend four students, for a total of 32. The University has had other nominees reach the state level in previous years, but so far none has been named a Rhodes Scholar.

Marasia and the other state candidates from Tennessee were interviewed by a group of panelists, each member a past Rhodes Scholar.

"The interview was exactly twenty minutes long," says Marasia. "If you were in the middle of a sentence and your time was up, you had to stop."

After the interview, Marasia and the other candidates waited while the panel decided who would advance to the regionals.

"It was really exciting to be in such great company," says Marasia. "All the candidates had excellent credentials. It was an honor even to be there."

Marasia enjoyed personal best times with the cross country team throughout the fall season.

She says running helps her manage her time more efficiently and find time for academics, as well as athletics.

"If I have practice from 4 to 6 p.m., then I'll plan on going to the library for a couple of hours afterward," says Marasia. "I know I can't procrastinate."

Another UR Rhodes Scholar candidate, Gretchen Witte, W'93, also is a varsity athlete. A native of Hines, Ore., she is a member of the synchronized swimming team and is a psychology major.

Other candidates nominated by the University were Candace Blydenburgh, W'93, a history major from Gasburg, Va.; Mark Glago, R'93, a sociology and political science major from Englishtown, N.J.; and George E. "Lee" Kline IV, R'93, a physics major and Oldham Scholar from Concord, Mich. CC

In memoriam

Leslie Cheek Jr.

Leslie Cheek Jr., H'55 and former Board of Associates member, died Dec. 6, 1992. He was 84.

Mr. Cheek served as director of the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts from 1948 until his retirement in 1968. Under his leadership, the size of the Virginia Museum tripled and the art collections more than doubled. Mr. Cheek also initiated many innovations, including the museum's touring exhibitions and its emphasis on the performing arts.

Among his many honors, Mr. Cheek was one of the first 12 winners of the Governor's Awards for the Arts in 1979.

Mr. Cheek was a member of the University's Board of Associates from 1974 to 1990. He was awarded honorary doctor of fine arts degrees from the University as well as the College of William and Mary.

A native of Nashville, Tenn., Mr. Cheek studied art history and graduated magna cum laude from Harvard University in 1931. He later graduated from Yale University with a degree in architecture. Before joining the Virginia Museum, he had taught architecture history at William and Mary and had served as director of the Baltimore Museum of Art.

Mr. Cheek was married to Mary Tyler Freeman, H'85, daughter of Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman, R'04 and H'23, who was editor of The Richmond News Leader and rector of the UR Board of Trustees.

In addition to his wife, Mr. Cheek is survived by two sons, Leslie Cheek III of Arlington, Va., and Richard Warfield Cheek of Belmont, Mass.; one daughter, Elizabeth Cheek Morgan of Belmont, Mass.; one sister, Mrs. Hulda Cheek Sharp of Brentwood, Tenn.; and seven grandchildren. LE

Mezzo-soprano Lindsey Peters Christiansen teaches voice and gives recitals

Lindsey Peters Christiansen, W'68, admits rather joyously that she does, indeed, have it all—a family and dual careers as a college teacher and a recitalist.

How does she do it? "With great difficulty," the Princeton, N.J., resident replies. She lists her priorities as teaching and family, with singing coming in third, best.

A mezzo-soprano, she had five German lieder recitals on the books for this winter, one at the University of Richmond, three locally in New Jersey and then one at a university in Los Angeles. Her program, "The End of the Century: In Paris and Vienna," focused on late 19th-century music.

"When I do recitals, everybody pays for them," she confesses. "My family wants me to do them. They are proud of me and put up with the inconveniences. My students are understanding, too."

"It's hard, real hard, especially right now when these recitals are breathing down my neck."

"I have to do it, all of them," she emphasizes. "There's no way that I can have any time with myself without the other two pieces. It is like a patchwork quilt, but somehow I manage to piece it together."

Since 1986, she has been chairperson of the voice department at Westminster Choir College, the well-known music school whose choirs are the regulars for choral performances of the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

"I have a lovely husband and lovely children and I work for a school that I just adore."

"But the singing piece of it, as any musician will tell you, you can't help but do. If you have a voice, you have this incredible need to sing."

Christiansen's husband, Knud, whom she met when she was studying in Germany, is an executive with a German plastics firm. Their children are Mary-Margarethe "Molly," 14, and Andreas, 11. And if you wonder if she ever takes a break, she does. It was arts-oriented. Recently she spent a "glorious" day in New York with her husband and son, visiting museums.

The daughter of a fourth-generation Methodist minister in Virginia, Christiansen had a choice between Randolph-Macon College and Westhampton College. She was attracted to the latter, she recalls, because of the von Beckerath organ which had been installed in the chapel in the early 1960s. Even as a teenager, she was drawn to baroque music, especially Bach, and thought she wanted to be an organist.

The teachers in U.R.'s music department became Christiansen's role models—Dr. James Erb ("the best choral interpreter of Bach I have ever worked with"), Suzanne Kidd Bunting and Catherine Pendleton Kirby.

Though, early on, Christiansen had planned a career in church music, she soon decided she wanted to be a college teacher like those on the U.R. music faculty. She also admired her English history teacher, Dr. John Rilling, "who really pushed my brain."

"They all gave me a sense of what a college teacher could be and I knew that was the path I would follow. Today, teaching is my passion. I feel that the reason I am here on earth is to teach."

As an undergraduate, the organ was her instrument and it wasn't until she was in graduate school that she realized that she really wanted to sing. She received master's degrees in organ and in voice from the University of Illinois.

She's thankful that she attended a liberal arts college rather than a conservatory, she says, because she received such a broad education. A student in the late '60s when the world was in turbulence, she, a Phi Beta Kappa honoree and a 1968 graduate, admits that Westhampton was an isolated island of innocence. "I had never heard of marijuana until I reached graduate school," she says.

The University, which she says has been very supportive of her career, last year named her a Distinguished Alumna. She is on the "Committee of 30," a group of alumni which is responding to the new arts facility planned for the Westhampton campus.

In music, her special interest is German lieder (art songs). "We speak German in our home," she says. Her favorite composers? "Bach, of course; also Hugo Wolf [who only wrote lieder], Schubert and Mahler."

She is pleased that the University is beefing up its arts facilities at a time when the arts, in economic straits, are problematical.

"When people started saying the arts are a luxury, deep down in my heart, I thought they might be right," she says.

"I am convinced now that the arts are the only hope for wise leaders, the only chance of having a society that is responsive to citizenry in a wise way, in that the right side of the brain is stimulated as much as the left."

"The arts are absolutely essential to being human and, if we look at humanity as anything less than that, we are in big trouble. A university, which stands for 'universal,' has got to have the arts as a part of its mission." BT

Five members of the class came to the Boatwright Dinner for the 70th reunion. Dorothy Thomas Gibson and Lila Lawson Jewell came from Northern Virginia and Rachel Newton Dickson, Edith Newton Eakes and Ruth Wallerstein Thalheimer were the Richmond representatives. We all had a good time and have decided to make an annual event as long as we are able. Rachel, Edith and I attended the luncheon on Saturday. We are sorry that more from the class were unable to attend.

Rachel Newton Dickson and Edith Newton Eakes are both well and spent some time in Montreat, N.C., this summer. Rachel also went to Florida to see her grandson's wedding and was planning to spend Christmas in Florida. Edith's son from California visited her this summer and planned to spend Christmas with her. They both stay busy with church and other activities.

Elsie Payne Cuthrie is still recovering from a mini-stroke. Her knees bother her and she uses a cane to get around. Her sister, Stella Mae, fell and broke three vertebrae in her neck, so Elsie helps look after her. Elsie celebrated her 90th birthday Sept. 26, and her family gave her a big party. Forty-six relatives came from various places and, of course, a lot of friends were also invited. In August, she attended homecoming at a church in Culpeper.

Inita Russell Wood had another stroke and is not able to play bridge any longer. She is still in her home but has nurses with her around the clock. She has two great-grandchildren that she sees often, which gives her great pleasure. She is in a wheelchair but able to go for rides. I might add, she has a super daughter!

Hilda Lawson Jewell is still in her home and has a couple who lives with her. She had a fall in July when the garage door fell on her. She was in bed for seven days and is recovering well. She used a wheelchair until early November when she started using a walker. She also started back to church in November. She enjoys reading, crocheting and going out for rides. She was a table to go to White Stone this summer.

Thelma Hill Marsh moved from her apartment at Lakewood Manor to Room 222 in the health care unit there. She seems to be doing well.

Claudia Patrick had a minor eye operation, which she said did not improve her eyesight. She had two falls and chipped a bone in her wrist, but all in all, she is okay. She still goes to church and plays, and she went to Wrightsville Beach in the fall.

Louise Shipman Hatz lives in a retirement home in Fredericksburg and does fairly well.

Ruth Wallerstein Thalheimer still lives in her home and has a student from UR living with her. She still drives her car in the daytime and gets about. She tries to walk a mile every day. She had her seven great-grandchild. Her oldest great-grandchild is in the second year of college.

Juliet Woodson is in the health care unit at Westminster Canterbury in Richmond and seems to be doing fairly well.

Dorothy Thomas Gibson was out shopping the day I called her. She lives with her daughter and son-in-law, Dottie and Dick Winterberger, and the three of them stay busy. She was 93 on Oct. 13 and had a big birthday party with lots of family and friends attending. Her grandson Rick lives with them when they are in Springfield. Her grandson Randy has two children, ages 3 and 5, that they kept while their parents took a short vacation.

Dorothy goes to a Sunshine Club once a month, where they have lunch and a program. She also participates in a seniors' program at the mall, where they have breakfast and a free movie. They planned to spend the winter in Florida as usual.

I was not able to reach Celia Levinson Meyer. She usually stays so busy that I probably did not catch her at home.

I have not heard from Louise Duke Brantley or Elizabeth Hoover for a long time. If there is anyone who has any news about them, please write to me or the Alumni Office.

With great sadness I write of three deaths in Oct. 1992.

Dr. John Stuessy Wright, an honor graduate, Mortar Board and Phi Beta Kappa, was an outstanding educator at the University of Miami for over 30 years as professor and professor emerita of history. She and her husband, Victor, a pioneer pilot, adopted a family of four children who grew to be successful and responsive adults. I once received many professional honors.

Mary Woodard Pilcher was a town student. She rode with Lila Crenshaw. Her blithe spirit made her a favorite. We all loved Mary.

Dr. Louise Fry Galvin, a renowned pediatrician, was a Mortar Board and Phi Beta Kappa graduate. I will not attempt to enumerate her numerous honors and accomplishments, for many are listed in her obituary.

A 1947 graduate and I had an interesting visit to our college for the inauguration of The Jepson School of Leadership Studies and dedication of Jepson Hall. Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf was the guest speaker. His speech was so outstanding. After the ceremonies, we toured some of the building, enjoyed delicious refreshments and joined the crowd to have our programs autographed by the general. We just had fun, irrespective of our ages.

REUNION '93

It's hard to realize that our class will be celebrating its 65th anniversary on May 21-22, 1993, at Alumni in DC.

Alice Lynch, our contact person in the Westhampton Alumnae Office, has assured me that there will be spaces and places reserved for us. The two big events will be the Boatwright Dinner on Friday night, May 21, and the Alumni Luncheon on Saturday, May 22. Alice and others who desire may wish to stay at the Holiday Inn at 6531 W. Broad St., Richmond, VA 23230, telephone (804) 285-9951, at a special rate. There will be more information about this from the University.

We will try to get in touch with everyone with personal letters or telephone calls. I am trying, especially, to contact classmates who have attended recent reunions. Some came with sons and/or daughters. It was wonderful being together with "our" families.

Ethel Pond Brinkley has agreed to be our Richmond area contact person. Her telephone number is (804) 741-0648.

Susie Powell Moore, who has already answered my letter, will have had a 15-day cruise in the Panama Canal Zone when she comes to our reunion. She hopes to come with her sister-in-law, Elaine Powell, who was with her for our 60th. Susie has been helping her sister, Annie Rene Powell Carey, W'26, who lives in Tucson, move to a smaller apartment. Susie lives in Green Valley, Ariz.

In September I received a letter from Kathleen "Kay" Moore Thorpe's daughter, Ann Thorpe McCann, W'52, asking for my help in locating Elmer Physic Fletcher's family. Ann had read about Elmer's death in a class news column. Ann's father was Jim Thorpe, R'27.

Ann wrote: "Aunt Nell and Uncle Fletcher were two of my parents' closest friends until my mother's death almost 30 years ago. I saw them often as a child and loved them dearly."

Ann and her husband, Earle McCann, have been married 40 years, have children and now live in Fort Walton Beach, Fla.

I received the following information about Ann Trent Gaines. Ann's husband, Wilbur R. Gaines, R'29, wrote: "Lost wife, Ann, W'28, in June. Blessed by twin daughters Daphne and Deborah, who take turns visiting their old Dad here at his home. A double blessing! Son Richard is president of his oil company in Dallas, Texas!"

Then in November, I received a letter from his daughters Daphne Koehler and Deborah O'Brien, who wrote that their father passed away Oct. 6, just four months after their mother's death.

Elizabeth "Ted" Harris Jones should be back at her Goodchance home several months before reunion. She has sent me notices from the Richmond papers of the following deaths:

Lane Myers Gagliardi died in Richmond on June 21, 1992.

Margaret "Pat" Knight Dillon, of Richmond, died at the home of her daughter, Julie, in Glad Hill, Va., on Thursday, Sept. 17, 1992.

Our sympathy goes to families of all of the above. We certainly shall miss them.

A note of pride about our class. I hope you noticed in the 1991-92 Honor Roll of Gifts that Westhampton's Class of 1928 ranked third in the list of "Ten Best Westhampton Classes" with a total of $22,220 contributed, with a total of $22,220, just $2,205 less than first place, the Class of 1948.

Please write me or call (703) 886-5573 if you want information about our reunion. I urge everyone who possibly can to make the effort to attend. If that's impossible, write me news about yourself.

Frances Andrews Wilks Overton is a busy lady. She attended the wedding of her granddaughter at Lamb's Creek Episcopal Church in King George County, Va.

Her musical talents led to singing in a choir of older, retired people and doing the music for church services, occasionally. She took on a piano student and enjoys the work.

Her family reunion in August, at Lignum, Va., drew 275 members. How wonderful!

The next deadline for class news is April 15, 1993.

We send our sincere sympathy to Kitty Luger Luning, whose husband, E. Buxton, died last May. "Buck" was a retired CPA.

Also in May our class celebrated its 60th reunion. Since only a few members could come back to campus, no special events had been planned. However, six of us gathered at the alumni/ae luncheon in the Robins Center. We sat together and were recognized and applauded as a reunion class. Those present were: Carolyn Thompson Broadus, Helen Pollard Deck, Ann Sadler Garrett, Muriel Mae Jones, Valerie LeMasurier Jones and Mary Hodnett Mathews.

We had letters from several classmates unable to come.

Betty Newcombe, who lives in Thomaston, Maine, was very regretful not to be with us. Helen LeGrande Barrett, was prevented from coming by the exciting arrival of a new grandchild, Karen Elizabeth Butler.

Buena Perkins Myers and her husband, Hugh, were busy selling their beloved rural home, "Our Acres," in Iowa. They have since moved to Rockford, Ill., to be nearer to children and grandchildren. When I last heard from Juanita Bush Glover, she was headed for a retirement home in Atlanta, where she will enjoy being close to her son and his family.

Please send in news. Your classmates will love hearing about you.

Alice Pugh Bariz was honored by being invited to participate in a delegation of school and public youth service librarians from throughout North America to visit St. Petersburg and Moscow in Russia and Warsaw, Poland. The delegation was set up by the president of the American Librarian Association at the invitation of librarians in Russia and Poland through the Citizens Ambassador Program of People to People International.

Unfortunately, Alice was unable to accept the invitation due to family commitments, including a move to a retirement home, but we are proud of our 1981 recipient of a Distinguished Alumna Award.

Jacqueline Warner Warren's granddaughter Elizabeth was graduated from U.Va. with honors. She is employed by Teach for America, a private philanthropic organization that places outstanding recent graduates in depressed school systems. She is assigned to Helena, Ark., as a middle school librarian. Jackie attended a meeting of international social workers in Leiden, The Netherlands, and traveled in Germany and France.

Sue Bonnett Chermiside and Herbert Engage in a variety of activities at their retirement home: water aerobics, watercolor and writing classes, gardening, walking, caring for two dogs and putting all their records on computer. Sue is the chairman of the garden committee at Summerhill. The best news of all is that Herbert has returned to excellent health. They celebrated their 55th wedding anniversary at the Peaks of Otter.

Marjorie Pugh Tabb's granddaughter, Laura Edge, graduated from St. Catherine's cum laude and received the Latin Award. She is a freshman at William and Mary, where she is a James Madison Scholar.

This past summer, Eleanor Whitehead Straffin visited three of her children in Colorado, Arizona and Washington state.

Alumni in the arts

Museum director Lisa Tremper Barnes helped design the facility at Ursinus College

The autobiography of Lisa Tremper Barnes, W'79, director of one of the most prestigious small art museums in the Northeast, reads, "I married a circus performer."

The circus interlude lasted only three years, but from the experience Barnes learned that there is more to art in life than just paintings on the wall.

"Circus people are artists in their own unique way," Barnes discovered. "My husband was an animal trainer and it was beautiful, graceful work. We spent many weekends among the tiger cages while elephants trumpeted about."

"We met when I attended a circus in Los Angeles and he picked me out of the crowd. We were intrigued with each other and that appeal blossomed to love."

"Our parting was amicable. He had left the circus when we married to become a contractor. It was not our jobs that were incompatible — we complemented each other in many ways — but there were cultural and educational differences."

Barnes says she has no regrets. "I am a very independent person." She describes herself in a beautiful speaking voice. "By marrying into the circus I was exposed to a way of life that most people have never experienced. I am richer for it."

Barnes' resume reads like a "Who's Who" in the art museum world. An art history major at Westhampton, magna cum laude graduate, she is currently the director of the Philip and Muriel Berman Museum of Art at Ursinus College in Collegeville, Pa. When she was chosen for the role at age 30, she became one of the youngest museum directors in the country.

Her role includes everything from sitting on the president's cabinet at Ursinus to making herself available at night when the burglar alarm goes off at the museum. She manages the budget, generates all museum publications, organizes and curates exhibitions, collaborates with other college departments in media relations, and works with development and fundraising.

Barnes, a liberal arts college with 1,200 students, has a beautifully wooded campus that is not unlike that of the University of Richmond. Barnes says, "It was like coming home."

The Berman collection, acquired by Philip and Muriel Berman of Allentown, Pa., who are both in their 70s, is considered one of the finest private collections in the country. Berman, a former United Nations delegate, is also chairman of the board of trustees of the Philadelphia Museum of Art. They gave over 1,400 works of art from their personal collection to their namesake museum at Ursinus College and endowed the museum directorship with a $1 million gift.

Barnes was hired five years ago to help design the museum facility, which opened in October 1989. The focus of the permanent collection is on American and European art of the 19th and 20th centuries, plus a fine group of Japanese woodcuts and an extensive collection of Pennsylvania German art and artifacts.

The collection consists of 3,000 works, about 60 percent of them from the Berman acquisitions. The museum, which has 17,000 square feet, is located in the former library, which was renovated to the tune of $2 million.

Prior to coming to Ursinus, Barnes had five years on the road with the Armand Hammer art collection. "It was a remarkable five years," she says, looking back on her role as assistant registrar.

"My work with the Armand Hammer Foundation took me to many countries — Israel, Russia, Austria — to install the collection and, in many cases, to live while the art was on exhibition. My role ranged from accompanying the art crates on cargo planes to being entertained by heads of state. I learned a lot about museums because I saw so many of them." Since the death of Hammer, the collection is now housed in his "vanity" museum in California.

Barnes, who was one of the first art history majors to make Phi Beta Kappa, received her master's degree in art history from the University of Southern California in Los Angeles.

Her first year at USC, Barnes volunteered in the art gallery and the director, Selma Holo, became her mentor. "She knew before I did that I would become a museum director," Barnes recalled. It was Holo who suggested that Barnes pursue the new position at Ursinus College.

A native of Long Island, N.Y., Barnes had parents who took their children to New York City to see museums and to other cultural centers such as Williamsburg, Va., and Sturbridge Village, Mass.

She chose UR because her grandmother, Maude Eberhart, had graduated from there in 1927. She hadn't the foggiest idea what her major would be until her sophomore year, when she took an art history class with Dr. Charles Johnson. He and Ann Frederick comprised the entire art history department. Barnes knew then that she would have a role in the visual arts world.

Her favorite art period is that of the ancient Greeks and Romans.

Barnes feels that the new arts complex at UR is long overdue. As a member of the "Committee of 30," a group of alumni which is supporting the project, she remembers that when she came to Westhampton College in 1975, it was the start of a great deal of building on the UR campus.

"Now it is the time to focus on the performing and visual arts," she observes. "The arts are a vital part of the fabric of our lives and it is important that they play a major role on a liberal arts campus. It will be up to the committee to obtain the needed support from the alumni. I'm anxious to help in any way I can." BT

In July, Mary Ellen Stephenson traveled to Spain, Portugal and Morocco. In October, she was on a two-week cruise on the Adriatic, Aegean and Black seas, making stops in such ancient and exotic places as Mykonos, Corfu, Istanbul, Ephesus, Odessa, Yalta, Athens and Venice.

Helen Falls was named recipient of the American Bible Association's Volunteer Award of Merit.

Mary Woolfolk Carlton had very successful eye surgery and Lacy Blackwell Alexander underwent surgery in April and is recovering nicely.

Boo Owens Page and Sidney traveled out West visiting the Grand Tetons. Later they took a cruise ship around the coast of Spain.

Margaret Bowlers Gill's granddaughter, Ingrid, was married in the spring.

Our 1992-93 class scholarship was awarded to Wendy Scarborough from Salisbury, Md. Wendy plays the piano and clarinet, and we received a lovely note of appreciation from her.

The holder of our first scholarship, Carrie Smith, is very active on campus, is senator from the sophomore class and participated in preparations for the presidential debate.

Kitty Ellis Fox entertained a group from our class for lunch at her home in Aylet.

Rae Norford Hess stays busy with her garden club making drier arrangements and terrariums. She and Gal are enrolled in a basic computer class, and Rae is taking a watercolor class at the community college. They both attended a Norford reunion in Charlottesville. Their grandson, Jim, is in his first year at Annapolis.

Several of you have expressed an interest in having a mini-reunion during Alumni Weekend, May 21-22. If anyone is interested, let me know and we'll make plans.

REUNION '93

Our class was well represented at the Boatwright Society reception and dinner on May 29, 1992. Eleven of us were there: Barbara DeJarnette Bagwell, Alice Lacy Chalkley, Millie Harrell Clinkscales, Emily Cudd Greal, Jan Bobbitt Grubbs, Gene Austin Hall, Peggy Lockwood Nolting, Tina McGallum Richardson, Hennie Harrell Smith, Curly Mitchell Sullivan, and Liz Darracott Wheeler.

We enjoyed a good dinner and a musical program ending with a singalong. Most of us attended the Alumni Luncheon the next day in the Robins Center.

We were glad to see Betsy Mue Douglass and have some news of her family. Her son, who is a lawyer, was appointed to the board of directors at Hampden-Sydney College.

With September, Millie Harrell Clinkscales and her husband, Sid, attended an Elderhostel in Arizona. They spent one afternoon with Curly Mitchell Sullivan at her home in Tucson. Their daughter Joyce is now music librarian with the New York State U. system in Long Island. At the graduation ceremony in May, she received a special award for outstanding achievement.

Hennie Harrell Smith's daughter Carolynn Casey is now registrar at UR. They see each other on those days that Hennie spends on campus. She's known as a "floater," helping out wherever needed. She also spends one day each week as a volunteer with the Henrico County Social Services.

Mildred Harvey Clark is busy with church activities at Greenwood United Methodist Church. She, too, is a volunteer for Henrico County Social Services several times a year when food is packed and distributed to the needy. At other times she enjoys playing bridge with friends.

Gene Austin Hall and his daughter Marianne had a lovely trip to Alaska in September.

We're glad to have some news of Jo Ann Kent Bouchard. She wrote that in July and August she enjoyed a trip to the British Isles. She is a Red Cross volunteer, helping with the blood pressure program. She hopes to be with us at our 55th reunion in 1993.

We offer our sympathy to Julia Gunter Davidson and her family on the death of her brother Doug in October. Julia had been in Richmond several times to see him while he ill. Both Anne Walker and I had a chance to talk with her during that time.

John Bobbitt Grubbs, Hennie Harrell Smith, and I had lunch together at the Virginia Museum in October. As you know, the three of us are trying to keep in touch with class members. You can help by contacting one of us when you have news to share.

Hope to see you in '93.

Saddyke Sykes Williams reports that she is entirely recovered from a serious illness and is grateful to be well. Many caring friends brought food and comfort for her during the time of her chemotherapy treatments. Saddyke also expressed her gratitude to her husband, Harry, for his support.

Fred and Maude Smith Jurgens celebrated their 52nd wedding anniversary with a trip to Niagara Falls in August. They later enjoyed a musical program in the recital hall at Westhampton (the old dining room!) at which both their daughter Carol and granddaughter Elaine sang in the chorus. Maude serves as an elder in the Crossroads Presbyterian Church in Richmond. She and Fred also attended ceremonies associated with the dedication of Jepson Hall on campus. Dorothy E. Roberts also attended the dedication.

Dell Smith Williams and her husband, Tony, enjoyed a visit during the summer at their home in Rickersville, Va., with Gene and Mary Sue Carter Williams, who were "in fine fettle." We are glad to hear that Dell's granddaughter Emily, now 12, is doing well. Dell went to Greensboro to help with Emily's dance recital. We sympathize with Dell and Tony in the loss of Maude, Emily's mother.

Our deep sympathy goes also to Margaret Brinson Reed upon the death of her husband, Jack, in July. Fred and Maude Smith Jurgens attended the funeral at Arlington National Cemetery with full military honors. We all owe a great debt to Marge for her faithful and persistent efforts toward our extremely successful scholarship fund.

Evelyn Smoak Lewter was in Roanoke in August for the wedding of her granddaughter Flannion Fisher Lewis, whose mother is Marilyn Lewter Fisher. Evelyn also visited her other daughters, Adrienne de Forest in Colorado and Marjorie Lewter in Pennsylvania.

Jane Davenport Reid, her husband, Emmet, and daughter Fontaine vicariously enjoyed the experience of Fontaine's daughter Jessica. Jessica lives in Pickering, North Yorkshire, and attends Lady Lumly's School, which was established in the 17th century. Emmet and Jane's older granddaughter, Cassandra, is a representative of the Episcopal Church in Virginia to students at UR. One of the activities was attending the ordination of a woman to the priesthood.

Jane led tours in October and November at the Virginia Museum in the Dutch and English exhibition that were on loan from England. She also serves on the hospitalary team at Richmond Hill, an equestrian conference center in an old monastery on Church Hill in Richmond.

Bella Hertzberg Jacob's only concession to aging is to chair the Montgomery County, Md., Commission on Aging, a time-consuming advocacy job. In her spare time, she plays tennis and is studying for a real estate license.

Wes and Margaret Linn Bernhart enjoyed their September trip to Hawaii. Fortunately, they confined their trip mostly to the "big island" and missed the worst of the devastating hurricane there. They also travelled to Lowell, Mass., for Wes's high school reunion, visits with friends, and looking up his "roots."

The California branch of Charlotte Ann Dickinson Moore's family came to Bethesda and Rehoboth Beach in July, with everybody together for part of the time. In August, Charlotte Ann and a cousin attended Elderhostels in Connecticut and Vermont. They also visited a cousin in Cambridge, Mass., and did some "root" searches of their own. In September, she attended her son-in-law's installation as a Superior Court judge in Tulare County, Calif., and a cousin's wedding in Lakirspur, Calif.

Helen Smith Moss's son Robert Clinton "Clinker" Moss II has returned to Richmond, where he is associated with an engineering firm. He and his mother attended the 50th reunion of the 508th Parachute Infantry of the 82nd Airborne Division in Virginia Beach. Helen was shown parts of a manuscript in which stories of her husband, Robert Clinton "Clink" Moss Jr., were recorded. Helen said it was a great thrill to hear the stories, which she had never heard. She also enjoyed seeing couples and friends she had known when her husband served in the war.

We were sorry to hear of the death of Wm. Roy Parsons Mallory, who had fought so valiantly against his illness. Emma Lou died in a Richmond hospital and is buried in Riverview Cemetery here. Her widower, Frank, said that he feels fortunate to have both daughters in Richmond. Patricia is married to Steve Rowe with the Richmond newspaper, and Elizabeth is married to Glenn German, a local architect. The class of 1940 joins your secretaries in sending deep sympathy to Emma Lou's family.

Many of you have not written or called to give us your news. We would love to hear from each of you.

As I write this, I have just finished watching the "great" debate in the very hall where some of our 50th anniversary celebrations took place. It made me feel good about UR. It would be hard to top our half-century class notes, but some of us still live in the afterglow.

Wendy Cline, who served as reunion chairman, wants those who did not attend to send for a copy of "The Way We Were," a little "performance art" whipped up by Frances Cack, Robbenberg, Mary Grace Scherer Taylor and Louise Hall Moser, which took the class on a trip down memory lane. The copies are available from Jane Thorpe in the Alumni Office. Incidentally, the class sent Jane Thorpe a spathyphillum — it's a plant for her office — in appreciation of all the help she gave in making the reunion a success.

Wendy and B.J. Cline had a visit from Wendy's French cousin and family for a month last summer. The cousin is a researcher in the use of misletoe to treat cancer. The children and grandchildren, including the Clines' daughter Langleigh Cline Lewis, W '77, are doing wonderfully with no language barriers.

A sad footnote to the reunion was the death of Eleanor Smart, wife of Dr. Robert Smart, both of whom spoke to the class delightfully during the final night of dinner. Wendy and B.J. sat next to Anne Frank Patterson and her husband, Harvey, at the funeral service and had lunch afterwards with Ann Pavey Garrett and her husband, Karl.

Alene Jones Patterson found the reunion a highlight of the year. "I never dreamed it would be so much fun," she wrote. "After all the years, I wondered what we could possibly have in common. It didn't matter. Just renewing friendships was enough." For January, the Pattersons are looking forward to repeating a cruise with friends for the fifth time, flying to Antigua and sailing to Grenada.

Alene added that Anne Frank Patterson had had a lovely time last summer, but it hadn't kept her from her job as hostess-guest at the old Jamestown Church. Her husband found her a wheelchair and she carried on.

Peggy Vicars Early, our new class president, and her husband, Joe, enjoyed the World's Fair in Seattle, Spain, last summer, but at a very quick pace. During the winter, the Earlys spend a month on Marco Island, Fla. Visitors last year were Betty Ann Petzinger Shackelford, who was unable to make the reunion, and LeVerne Priddy Mue.

Early reports that she has four grandchildren who are attending UR. Westhampton students. They are the children of her daughter, Ellen Early Lusk, W '74, and Suzi Early, W '79.

Ethne Flanagan Higginbotham wrote from Annapolis that retirement has been a complete change of pace and lifestyle. "...a move from the parsonage living (Higgin was a pastor), to our first home, a little '30s winterized summer cottage on the water."

Higgin has been building a sunroom and deck, growing vegetables, flowers and fruit trees on their half-acre. Their children and grandchildren are close by. They sail and crab and enjoy a senior program at the local community college.

Puppeteer Mary Duane Hoffman opened "Hansel and Gretel" in October and is staging it through May in the Swedish cottage in Manhattan's Central Park. It is being presented by the Marionette Theatre of the New York City Department of Parks and Recreation. Lamenting what has happened to the arts during the recession, Mary reported there will be only three puppeteers on the "bridge." Last time she staged the puppet show, there were nine.

She also was "tying up" the by-laws of the Puppetry Guild of New York and is planning a trip to San Francisco in July for the annual Festival of Puppeteers of America.

Mary Duane Hoffman also reported that Bette MacMurtry Clark recovered nicely from her post-reunion surgery.

One of our classes' most published writers, Lucy Burke Allen Meyer, sent a really important commentary on the need for legalized abortion. It appeared in Style Weekly in Richmond. She is writing a book on her mother who "rode in her first car at age 18, saw her first telephone at 19, played tennis in long dresses..." She's also writing a mystery with a cougar.

Meanwhile, she and her husband, Wally, visited the middle West last summer following the trails of the covered wagons. After miles of wheat fields and no trees, they yearned for something green and drove to South Dakota and Mt. Rushmore and found it "awe-inspiring."

As for me, I'm writing for a dozen different newspapers in Connecticut with a dozen editors with different demands. Two of the papers call themselves "The Advocate," which keeps me juggling who's who in my mind. I attended Press Day at the Matisse exhibition in New York and covered it from different angles for the two "Advocates." The story I was most pleased about was the relationship of Matisse to jazz.

I make more money writing about how to cook a pork tenderloin (an interview with Pierre Franey) than about art, but the challenge isn't there. In my retirement, George golfs and I write. That's become our daily way of life and we are supportive of each other's interests.

Treasurer Ada Moss Harlow wants the class to know that widowers made donations to the scholarship fund: Gayle Riley in memory of Pat Abernethy Riley; Joseph Jacobson for Evelyn Cosby Jacobson; and Bill Parkerson for Nancy Davis Parkerson. Nancy's son, daughter and sister also made substantial contributions.

Betty Ann Petzinger Shackelford, our May Queen and Pi Beta Kappa, missed the 50th reunion but caught up with all of the news of it on a trip to Virginia with Peggy Vickers Early. Betty wrote that Shack (George Shackelford, a UR football great) is a good golfer and stays busy at it. She has been teaching at a nursing home and says she is ready for a new career at 71. They live in Houston, Texas, and their two children and grandchildren are within 50 miles, which makes them happy.

You all promised to keep me supplied with news. The next deadline is April 15, 1993.

Be sure to set aside the weekend of May 22, 1994, for our 50th reunion. We are making every effort to track down every member of our class in anticipation of this special occasion. By now you have received correspondence from our present, Helen Curtis Patrick, about plans for our class gift.

Two of the girls we had lost track of are "Ruth Van Ness Brust" lives in Englewood, Colo., and Mary Lee Smith Chapin lives in Cuttingsville, VT. I was sorry to learn that both Ruth and Mary Lee are widowed.

Ruth Van Ness Brust's children are scattered. Kathy attended the U. of Connecticut and is married with two sons in Stamford, Conn. Ruth's two sons, Bucky and Chris, are in Northern Virginia and Chicago. Bucky has two children. Daughter Candice lives just 35 minutes from Ruth in Sedalia, Colo., and is married and works at the Denver Tech Center.

Ruth stays busy taking part time at the new Denver North Market, volunteer working with the Colorado Symphony, singing in a church choir and swimming. Best of all — she plans to be with us for the 50th!

Congratulations to Mimi, who became Mimi Hill Erb in June. She and her new husband, Dave, now share nine children and 14 grandchildren. They live in Miami's home and she said it's been quite a feat combining two households into one.

Lucy Garnett Lacy and Bill were visiting relatives in Charlottesville, and much to Mimi's surprise and delight, they were able to come for the wedding. Mimi has written a second series of devotionals in the Presbyterian publication "These Days." She also has had two delightful articles published in the Roanoke Times — one of her childhood memories of the Roanoke City Market and a color feature, complete with her picture, about growing up in Blacksburg. You will be able to enjoy these in our scrapbook at our reunion.

Nita Tiller Elmquist, with her son and daughter-in-law, went on a 100-mile hiking tour in England last summer. They also traveled to Paris, where her son presented a paper. Helen Curtis Patrick is justly proud that her daughter Dale, who lives in Cincinnati, has been named to the UR Board of Trustees.

Dot Ihken has recovered from hand surgery and is glad to be able to enjoy her crafts again.

Mary Alderson Graham and Billy had a nice trip to Aspen, Colo., where they took a whitewater rafting trip down the Colorado River. Millie Cox Goode and Skee vacationed in Pipestem, W. Va., while Skee was recovering from back surgery.

Ann Burcher Stansbury and Warren are delighted with their granddaughter, Olivia Ann, born to son David and his wife in September. David is a lieutenant commander in the Navy, stationed in Norfolk. Ann and Warren also have two grandsons. Billy Jane Crosby Baker enjoyed having Fifi Smethurst and a friend stop by on their way to Florida.

Lois Heister Bryan lectured on stress and weight management and physical fitness to the Southern Baptist Convention missionary wives and staff members from Canada, Mexico and Middle America at a meeting in Mexico.

Molly Warner Stephenson and Jim spent little of the summer in Florida. They vacationed on the Olympic Peninsula in Washington and visited their daughter in California before we met them for an Elderhostel at Lake Junaluska, N.C., in August.

Then we went to their time-share in Sky Valley, Ga., where Norma Sanders Granley and Ed joined us. We had great fun with the rainy side effects from Hurricane Andrew. Norma and Ed traveled on to visit their daughter in Atlanta. Molly had some great Westhampton snapshots that Fifi passed on to her when she gave up her house in New Jersey.

When Stonie and I were in Massachusetts last summer, we enjoyed a short visit with Rita Muldowney Copley. She lives with her daughter Beth, who works for an environmental firm. Son Al is a musician in Europe. Her other son, Frank, works for a newspaper in Oneida, N.Y. She has five grandchildren. I also called Anne Fisher Keppeler, who lives in Northampton, and had a nice chat with her.

Evermond Hardie Daniel and Clayton enjoy their time-share at North Litchfield Beach. She says she starts relaxing when she gets within 50 miles of the beach. Their oldest grandchild, Whitney, is making the rounds of colleges, including UR. All their grandchildren are very active involved in tennis, basketball and volleyball.

Our sympathy to Mary Eubank Barnes, whose husband died in July. Mary is staying busy with gardening and community activities. Martha Anne Mercer Dast and Bill spend a lot of time at their cottage in Currituck, N.C., now that Bill has retired.

Lois Kirkwood North visited Norfolk for a week in October. We went to the Tidewater Westhampton Club luncheon, where we enjoyed seeing Ann Call Taylor from Suffolk. Ann was widowed many years ago and worked as a railroad draftsman with the VA Department of Highways. Since her retirement seven years ago, she has enjoyed visiting her daughter, who lives and teaches in Germany.

Lois also got to see Gene Shepard Keener. We send Gene our sympathy in the loss of her husband in November.

Once more let me remind you to specify any money you send to the college for the Class of '44 Fund so it will go toward our 50th reunion gift. Even husbands can do this and still get credit for their class at UR! Also start saving items for our scrapbook, and let me hear from you.

Time has flown since the last news was sent in, and I didn't get in touch with as many people as I would have liked to have done. When you are in a letter writing mood, drop me a note and let me know what you have been doing. It would be fun if we could hear from every single member of the class.

One of the main themes in letters in addition to traveling has been 50th school reunions. This should get us ready for our 50th reunion in '96. I took my sister to her 60th Wellesley reunion in May, and there were also 60 of her class.

There was also one band of 100 years there for her 80th reunion. So see what we have to look forward to doing.

Irene White Bain enjoys spending time between her home on a lake in Brandermill, Midlothian, Va., and summer weekends at a cottage on a river. She does crafts and enjoys her two granddaughters, ages 10 and 8, and her little black dog, Shondra.

Nancy Todd Lewis divides her time between trips to San Diego and to California now that her husband is retired. Since all of their children live within 10 miles of home, everyone is together Sundays when the Lewises are home. She saw Joyce Eubank Todd in Richmond in late summer for the wedding of Joyce and Howe's son Glen.

Dottie Davis Whittenberger and her husband divide their time between their home in Springfield, Va., and a condo in Cocoa Beach, Fla. They had been there only three weeks when Hurricane Andrew hit and they had to leave. Their place missed the damage.

Julia Beckenbabe was not so lucky when a car that crashed through the property behind them became airborne and did serious damage to their house and kept them in a state of confusion for some time.

Jackie Hodges Walker and her husband, who live in San Francisco, are about to visit Yosemite. Last year they visited Glacier Park and Sun Valley. Bev Ryland did the grand tour with a safari to Kenya, Tanzania and Nairobi. They ran into no trouble and went fishing in Lake Victoria. Bev divides her time between a condo in Richmond and an apartment in Alexandria. She does volunteer work for the Salvation Army.

Ann Hiskerson Dalton went to Czechoslovakia, Poland and Russia as a member of the Citizen Ambassador Program Economic and Financial Management Delegation. Mary Frances Butler Wood travels all over the United States with her husband on his business.

Mary Tuck Echols retired from the art department of Mary Baldwin College.

Faye Clarke Randle's husband retired and now they are planning some trips. Faye volunteers at a hospital and plays bridge. Winnie Hambleton Doboy made two trips to California to visit her son and jaunted to Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina to visit family and friends.

Alta Ayers Bower and her husband met while sailing. During the summer they spent their own boat out of harbor in Gloucester, and in April they sailed in and around St. Martin with three other couples in a 50-foot sailboat. Julia Willis Phillips misses her work in New York City but sounds so busy with their apple orchards and her weekend bed and breakfast.

Peggy Clark Bowdler, according to reports, has created a wonderful garden with special interest in the herb garden. She has been nursing her husband, who has a broken shoulder.

Betty Edwardson Neutze was one of those who went back to her 50th high school reunion, as did Jackie Hodges Walker and Jinks Booth Grabbe. Betty manages booths for the Stonewall Jackson Memorial Hospital Festival and the Rockbridge County Festival. She takes trips to different parts of the country to see her children, including her oldest daughter, who is in the Army and received a degree in radiology at Waller Reed.

A few of us are still working. Betty Bowlder Muirhead is very busy at the library of Yale British Arts Center. I still maintain a busy practice of therapy with young children, with a specialty in children who have been sexually abused. It is long-term therapy and at times I'm an expert witness in court. We also continue our work with International Center and have foreign visitors in our home.

We want to extend our deepest sympathy to Dottie Davis Whittenberger and Cornelia Reid Rowlett on the loss of their loved ones. I have heard both of them say such loving things about their mothers that I know they will have wonderful memories. Also, Betty Edwardsen Neutze is very much in our thoughts, as we heard about the loss of her baby grandson.

Those of you who have not sent us news in the last year, do write so that we can all keep up.

REUNION '93

I have just finished watching the second presidential debate on television, at which I saw the audience for a '48 alumna. Weren't those aerial shots of the campus just beautiful? How can you resist coming back for our 45th reunion next May?

Margaret Sabine Brizendine will be there. Margaret called me in August and then wrote in October. She travels to Florida to see her daughter Anne and family, and she visits with her other daughter Martha in Philadelphia.

Pat Adams Woodhead is still the medical library director at Pocono Medical Center, but admits to indulging in her passion for fly fishing and was elected

Alumni in the arts

Soprano Esther Jane Hardenbergh aspires to sing opera

Esther Jane Hardenbergh came East to the University of Richmond because she wanted to hear "Horowitz play the piano, Beverly Sills sing and Barshynskov dance."

Now the aspiring opera singer, who graduated in the class of '82, is actually auditioning for the same company, the New York City Opera, where Sills was the artistic director from 1979 until recently.

Hardenbergh had entered the University with the goal of becoming a doctor like her dad but, by sophomore year, had switched her sights to a music major.

The University of Richmond was a natural for her. Her mother, Jane Slaughter, was a member of the Westhampton College class of '51 and her grandmother, Margaret Hooker, the class of '22. Various great-uncles and aunts were University of Richmond alumni from classes of the '20s.

Having won a competition to debut as solo pianist with the Boulder Philharmonic at age 17, Hardenbergh was well tuned to piano when she reached the University but was just discovering she had a voice.

After an initial boost from the music department at the University of Richmond, Hardenbergh "was blessed" with doors which just seemed to open for her along the way to where she is now, in New York City, studying at Columbia University for a doctorate in education in the arts and auditioning nonstop for roles either in opera or oratorios.

"I've always known that music would play a major role in my life," the American- and European-trained Hardenbergh says. "Right now, my goal is opera, but if I had a preference, I would be singing sacred music. I'd love it if my life career could be in German lieder and oratorios."

Between her junior and senior years at UR, Hardenbergh went to Germany to study the language in a class for foreigners in which she was the only English-speaking student. She also studied voice with Marion Paton, whom she had known in Boulder.

By graduation with a bachelor's degree in music education, Hardenbergh had decided on a master's degree in church music and was on her way to the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Kentucky.

But Hardenbergh was encouraged to pursue a career in voice. She set her sights on the "biggies" in the Northeast for further study—The New England Conservatory and Boston University in Boston; Eastman in Rochester, N.Y.; and Juillard and the Manhattan School of Music in New York City.

She was accepted at each of them. She chose Boston University because of the teacher, Chloe Owen, and gained her master's in voice and opera performance.

It was at Boston U. that she met German baritone Hans Hotter, considered to be the world's greatest Wagner (the god in all of Wagner's "Ring" operas), when he gave a master class there.

Hardenbergh's next move was to the American Institute of Music Studies in Graz, Austria, and since her Boston U. professor had said Herr Hotter had praised her singing, she wrote to him. He invited her to Munich for additional studies with him.

While in Graz, she looked out of a bus window and spotted Dr. James Erb, choir director at UR. He invited her to sing "The Messiah" at the University of Richmond in 1985. It was her first paid job and the first of many "Messiahs" to come.

It was at that performance that Hardenbergh, a lyric soprano, met Lindsey Christiansen, singing the alto solo (see profile, page 30). Hardenbergh, like Christiansen, is on the "Committee of 30," a group of alumni who endorse the projected new arts facility at UR and who themselves are active in the arts.

Other Richmond professors whom Hardenbergh credits with encouragement are Suzanne Kidd Bunting, head of the music department; Richard Becker, piano professor; and Catherine Pendleton Kirby, her voice teacher.

Back to Europe again, Hardenbergh auditioned at German opera houses. When she won third prize in a Meistersinger competition, her hometown music critic in Boulder wrote that the prize "would keep her in apple strudel for a long time."

She found an apartment in Bonn, the capital of West Germany, just as the Berlin Wall was about to fall. There she lived another "blessed" life, acquiring agents, having "wonderful" auditions, giving recitals and teaching music in the diplomatic school for two-and-a-half years.

"I had multi-cultural, multi-ethnic classes and I loved it," she reports. The second year in Bonn, she took a group of students on a two-week tour of the Soviet Union, giving concerts in Yalta, Moscow and Thilisi.

A tall blonde who looks German (her father's heritage is German), Hardenbergh found that the German opera houses liked her but were reluctant to take on an American.

"In Germany," she explains, "when you get a call for an audition, you take the next train. Then you sit and sit at home by the phone, waiting for a callback. Teaching helped fill the hours."

While in Europe, she also spent five months in Florence learning Italian.

Back in the states in 1990, Hardenbergh taught for two years in Alabama, her parents' native state, and helped to start a performing arts school in Marion, Ala., not far from Selma.

This was a fulfillment of one of her early dreams, "to be a mission doctor" to help those who have nothing. She feels she can accomplish some of the same good with music.

She thinks everyone can sing and should. "The Bible says 'make a joyful noise,'" she says, with a throaty laugh. "That doesn't mean you have to hit a great high C."

Upcoming engagements include a New York recital, a series of recitals next fall in Europe and several orchestral appearances.

Whatever else happens in her life, she says, "there will always be music. I can't imagine a life without it. It affords self-expression and self-discipline."

"And look what it has done for me. It has given me a chance to travel and to experience many cultures." BT president of the Broadhead Chapter of Trout Unlimited. They give demonstrations of stream entomology. Pat's son Bob works for HBO on Long Island, and Shawn is engaged to a nationally winning race car driver.

Felcity Apherly Hofferke drove 1,365 miles last summer, tracing the travels of Lewis and Clark and following the Oregon Trail. She gives fall lectures at the Oregon Library, two workshops for the Commission on Aging, writes book programs at three retirement homes and was casting the fall production with the St. Luke's Players of "The Cat and the Canary."

Seth Darrow Jewell is stepping to second place in her Shoreline Realty business and turning the head broker's job over to her son Robert. This will give her more time to spend with her labradors and "putzing" around, entertaining seven grandchildren.

Frances Orrell Lineberry and Berlin had a trip to Austria in August, visiting Vienna and Salzburg. They topped it off by going to Venice and riding in a gondola.

Loisane Lovens Peck joined her friends once a week to play golf and enjoy each other's company.

Virginia Smith Kynett and Gerry spent the summer at home in order to welcome their fifth grandchild. Hurricane Andrew arrived 30 miles south of them and continued after passing up. After the storm, they went to Victoria, B.C., Seattle, San Francisco, and Carmel. Then they spent five weeks on the west coast of Florida.

Betty Hickerson Butterworth and Jack returned from a delightful trip to British Columbia and Alaska. Betty sent me some stamps to go with all the mailings of '48 materials — wonderful stamps of the Olympics and the Alaskan Highway.

So many of you expressed your love and concern for Emily Smith Powers. Emily's husband, Jack, died in June, and we all grieved so sorry to hear this sad news. I understand Emily also lost her mother in March. Virginia Herndon Pugh took Emily to the beach for a few days in August to relax and enjoy. Emily continues to teach adult education classes, and her son Paul and two daughters are close by.

Millicent Hutcherson Taylor's husband, Sam, had a triple bypass operation at Easter and has had a remarkable recovery. So glad!

Barbara Freed Roberts retired in June as a reading specialist, spent a "stunfully lazy summer" and enjoyed New Mexico's early autumn. Her daughter Allegra received her Ph.D. in archaeology in July and is affiliated with the Navajo Nation.

Judy Barnett Seelhorst's home remodeling project is still in progress. What started with the kitchen has expanded to a new great room. Judy has lots of credit to go so the project goes slowly. She and Art had 19 for Labor Day who planned to be back for Thanksgiving.

In September Alice Goodman saw Faye Hines Kilpatrick and Bob at church. They had gotten back from a trip to Scotland. Alice also talked with Mary Cross Marshall, who is busy sewing and quilting and has done some watercolor paintings. Alice still works part time for Medical Specialists Inc. performing cardiac ultrasound procedures. She retired from MCV in 1987.

Beth Chambliss Holcomb's beautiful card told of a trip she and Charlie made up the East Coast to Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and New York. She loved Niagara Falls and Mt. Washington.

Pam Burnside Gray spent a busy summer leaving up with the weeks at home during the week so she could go boating on the weekends. Elmon, their son Bruce and Pam took the boat to Bonaville, then over to Nassau. When not on water, Pam does yoga and walks two miles a day, "moderately fast."

Doris Vickers Lektorich's long letter told of a trip in the spring to Switzerland. Two highlights were taking three cog trains up to Jungfrau, the top of Europe at 12,000 feet, and seeing the real Matterhorn. While she was gone, she became a grandmother for the 25th time.

Elizabeth Kolkunjak Cowles and Sidney were joined by nine other family members in July and enjoyed a week in Val, Colo. Bob had successful cancer surgery and took two weeks off from school to recuperate. She said she is doing fine and is very lucky.

Another beautiful card from Helen Ceresa Campbell, who enjoys retirement after 34 years of teaching, plus an additional time in the 1950s, totaling 42 years. She was selected Teacher of the Year 1992 by her colleagues in New Brunswick Senior High School for her dedicated service to the youth of an urban area.

Arcene Barbara Feunon's was home via the alumnae office. She said Pat retired just as the cost of living went up. Two more grandchildren born since April, for a total of seven, and "the quality of life increases."

Pat Parlow Daniel returned from Maine, Massachusetts and Connecticut, settling in at Shell Point Village in Fort Myers, Fla., with all her New England furnishings. She is as proud as the rest of us about the UR site of the presidential debate, quoting one commentator who said it was a "pastoral" campus.

Jackie Jeter Shock called to check in and most of the newsletter was shared with her. I hardly seemed to realize that it's been nearly five years since Jackie turned over the secretarial duties to me.

Jeanne Decker Swank has traveled to England, Wales and Scotland with her sister and brother-in-law for 24 days, then to Texas to see one daughter, then to Nebraska, Iowa and Minnesota with her other daughter.

So many of you spoke of coming to the reunion in May. Jean Brunsey Biscoe wrote that Mary Cross Marshall is the reunion chairman and plans are well underway. Please respond with a "yes" when you hear from the committee. Jean is getting ready by keeping "young, beautiful and healthy" with Betty Butterworth, doing water aerobics at the "Y."

Your response to my crazy card was great! This news will reach you before the reunion, so let me take a moment to thank all of you for your loyal participation in sending news and encouragement to me these last five years. You make me proud! Cheers!

A special tribute goes to our group leaders. Nearly all of them sent news, but they get very discouraged when they write and you don't respond. Please drop them a line as soon as you hear from them. Your classmates want to know about you.

Likewise, please make your contribution to the class of '50 fund. We have a large goal to meet by the time of our 50th reunion.

New grandchildren are important news for our class this time. Helen Lamphathakis Kostyal and Dick had their first grandchild, Gaudia Hana Elmgren Dinkels, born Sept. 23 to Kim and Dennis Dinkels.

A little grandchild, Carolina Jane Cary, born in March 1992 in Spokane, Wash., is the third grandchild for Bernadine Aye Clarke and John. They flew out to welcome this little girl soon after her birth. They also visited their daughter, Melissa, a social worker in Seattle.

Going to California to get acquainted with the newest grandchild, Rosman Goldberg Lynch, were Alice Clarke Lynch and Bob. They also had a chance to visit their son Pat and his new bride, Ging, of Chinese origin. Pat has been studying Chinese and speaks it fluently. Alice's husband, Bob, has retired from the faculty of MCV.

In August Frank Sutton Oliver and Raymond celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary with a dinner at the home of their daughter Ginny and her husband in Richmond. Not only were their three children and seven grandchildren present, but also some of the attendants in their wedding, including Vivian Betts Lewis, Rosa Lou Soles Johnston and Gene Hart Joyner and their husbands.

A larger retirement party honored Pete Lambert's husband Maryanne Bugg Lambert. Barbara Beattie Fanney and Skip attended it.

Last April, Barbara and Skip entertained Mary Sue Mock Milton and Cecil and Maryanne Bugg Lambert and Pete in their lovely home in Ford's Colony neighborhood. Patricia and Robert, Ida Smith Hall, Helen Lamphathakis Kostyal and Libby Givens Pierce met Barbara for lunch at the Ford's Colony club house.

Win Schanen Mitchell and Bill are travel agents and had a great trip to the Wisconsin in June. All summer they were busy guiding groups to such places as Mexico and California. They are planning a cruise to Alaska in 1993 and invite members of our class to join them.

Wine sister, Jeanne Schanen McKenry, had been busy caring for her six-year-old granddaughter while her daughter recuperated from a gall bladder operation.

Win enclosed a letter from Nancy Chapin Phillips, who is lucky to have all five children and six grandchildren living in Tulsa, Okla. Nancy plays lots of duplicate bridge and tennis. Entering the Senior Olympics, she feels strongly that the doing is more important than the winning.

Vivian Betts Lewis and W.P. had a great trip to Florida in the spring and went as far south as Key West. They also enjoyed four days at Virginia Beach last summer. In July, Libby Givens Pierce and Bucky went to Chicago and St. Louis. On the way they enjoyed learning about the city of Hannibal, Mo. In August, they flew to San Francisco, where they had a guided bus tour of California.

Helen Lamphathakis Kostyal and Dick had lovely pictures of the scenery to show after their trip to Oregon and the Pacific Northwest in late August.

In July, Barbara White Balderson

and Les drove to Hot Springs, Ark., for the national checkers tournament.

Jean Tinsley Martin, accompanied by her daughter Cathy and her son "Rusty," flew to Moscow for a week of sightseeing while Rory was in Siberia on business.

Virginia Sims went with her church members on a mission trip to Newfoundland County, Va., where they put a new band on a church and conducted a vacation Bible school.

Charles Ryland Price and her husband had a Chesapeake Bay cruise on their boat to Annapolis and St. Michaels.

Talking of boats, "B" Covington O'Flaherty and Bill purchased a pontoon party boat, which they enjoyed with family and friends at their summer home on the Rappahannock River.

Ellen Largent Perlman and Al had a wonderful Elderhostel trip in the spring to France.

Gene Hart Joyner and Tal had their family at the Outer Banks for a week.

In September Barbara Coleman Augustine and Jim were at Nag's Head. Last August they had a fabulous trip to Hawaii.

Lee Reeves Childress had a birthday dinner in July for Lorraine Chapman. In the spring, Lee was recognized by UR as an alumni achiever for her accomplishments with Meals on Wheels and her work in the UR alumni activities.

Lee Gordon Brandenberg Halloran, Gatwood Holland Stoneman, Doris Balderson Burbank, Jean Tinsley Martin, Gene Hart Joyner and Margaret Alexander Anderson for lunch and lots of chatter during the summer.

How good to know that Janice's husband, Charlie, is recuperating from a massive heart attack. Likewise we are glad that Mokey Rounds Holloway is regaining her strength after a serious round with cancer. She enjoyed having the grandchildren at their summer home at Ocean City.

How good to receive a postal card from Louise Triplett Friedly saying she and her husband have been retired 11 years and are busy with their dog.

Pris Enslin Marsh loves retirement but continues to give much time to Big Brothers/Big Sisters as a caseworker.

Joyce Betts Pierce and Jack purchased a 1954 Chevy II formerly belonging to Missa Helen Monsell and Mrs. Spencer Albright. They are in the process of renovating it. Lo Covington Randall's husband, Harry, has retired from the Methodist ministry. They moved to Epworth Villa in Oklahoma City, where they will be much closer to their children.

So good to hear from Wanda Archer Gordon. She and Hal are now retired and have moved from Columbus, Ohio, to Arapahoe, N.C., where they have built a home.

Charles Butler Clerkey died in first house, Vernon Bess died in 1975. She has since remarried. She and her husband, Ward, spend much time in church work and traveling. They were going to Paris, Tel Aviv and Jerusalem.

Patricia Kelly Jordan and her husband, Alex J. Jordan, R'99, spent the week of Oct. 4 touring the West. They had planned to visit their son Carter's family in Dallas, Texas.

Ann Nebbett James is still with SESCO Management Consultants as a vice president and senior consultant. Her family continues to grow, with the eighth grandchild expected this spring.

We express our sincere sympathy to Barbara Taggart, whose father and brother died this year. Lorraine Chapman, whose mother passed away on May 1, 1992, and Mary Howard Holloway, whose mother died in March 1992. Mary's husband, Bill, also lost his mother in May. And Louise "Ludie" Hickerson Wiley's husband, Doug, died in October.

Forty-five class members from all over the United States as well as Germany traveled to Richmond for our 40th class reunion held May 29-30 of this past year.

Chairperson Mary Ann Coates Edell, along with co-chairs Sue Peters Hall and Betty Edmonds Dunn, and class president, Jackie Gerson Lowenstein, did a marvelous job of planning and providing a full schedule of activities that allowed us ample opportunity to renew old friendships in gracious settings.

Festivities began with a cocktail party and dinner Friday evening at Willow Oaks Country Club, attended by 36 classmates and 24 husbands. For some of us, it was our first opportunity to see each other since graduation. I believe many of us were overcome by the depth of our feelings as we searched each others' faces, embraced, and felt again the old bonds of friendship that were forged so long ago at dear old Westhampton College.

On Saturday morning, 40 of us continued our visiting at a coffee at the home of Betty Edmonds Dunn, where she was ably assisted by Richmond classmates Bertha Cosby King, Isabel Sanford Rankin and Diane Evans Glenn.

We then drove to the Robins Center for the Grand Alumni Luncheon. Our group had one of the largest contingents present. Certainly one of our proudest moments of the weekend occurred when classmate Harriet Stubbs was named Distinguished Alumna of the Year for her work in environmental science, specifically in the area of acid rain. Afterwards, a number of us drove over to the president's home for an informal tour of the home and grounds.

A cocktail buffet was held on Saturday evening at the Lora Robins Gallery on the Westhampton campus. Richmond College and Business School classes of 1952 joined the 50 guests from our class to view the beautiful art on display as well as continue catching up with old friends.

Anne Gibson Hill, who had just arrived in town in time for the cocktail party, invited all our classmates and their husbands to join her for brunch the next morning at the Marriott. Thirty-eight happy, tired, hungry people gathered for one last drive before returning to their homes.

I know I speak for all of us who attended our memorable weekend when I say that there are not enough words to thank our generous Richmond classmates who worked so unselfishly to make this reunion a success. We hope that you were satisfied and pleased with the way things turned out.

There was also some class business transacted along with the festivities. New class officers for 1992-93 were elected at a brief business meeting: president, Bertha Cosby King; secretary, Helen Want Miller; fund-raising chairman, Harriet Stubbs. A proposal was also voted upon and accepted to change the procedure for the selection of the recipient of the Class of 1952 Scholarship Award. The word "deceased" was also deleted from the name of the scholarship.

I was saddened to hear at the reunion that Marjorie Spacer Fiorino had died in April 1990. Marian Lacy Mahon told me she had died and said that her four children and former husband, Robert, conducted her funeral in Bowling Green. Marjorie, although handicapped, had led a full and meaningful life. She made one last visit to Westhampton about 14 years ago, and despite her blindness, found her way to her old room in the dorm and to other spots she remembered.

Harriet Stubbs asked me to convey her appreciation to those of you who have returned the information sheet she asked for use in our little class booklet. About 30 people have responded so far, and she is having the information put on her computer.

If you have misplaced her letter and would like to participate, she needs your maiden name, current name, address, phone number, employment, husband, children, grandchildren, things you want to share about your life since college, special projects and family affairs. Her address is 1509 Varsity Drive, Raleigh, NC 27607. Harriet is with the department of math and science education at NC State U.

Anne Gibson Hill and Harriet Stubbs, who are both in Raleigh, stay in frequent touch with each other. Harriet attended an international environmental conference in Canada last year.

Betty Hurt Shipley, whose husband had made an eloquent extemporaneous speech at the reunion paying tribute to members of our class, said she received a long letter and telephone call from Marilyn McMurray Rishell. Betty's children are scattered geographically. Her youngest son is a student at George Mason U. in Fairfax, Va.; another son is in Newport News; her daughter is in Atlanta; and her oldest son is in Charlotte. Betty is also a proud grandmother.

Marilyn McMurray Rishell celebrated the arrival of their ninth grandchild, the fifth child of their oldest daughter who lives in Gainesville. The Rishells also have three other children. For the last 17 years, Marilyn has been involved in the interdenominational group, Community Bible Study, which stresses community action on a variety of issues. She has worked primarily with children's programs and is now the area director for day classes in Maryland.

Sophie Sze Ritenour and her husband, John D., moved back to Strasburg in 1990 following almost a decade of retirement for him in Florida. While in Florida, Sophie and Ann Thompson McCann taught together in the same elementary school. They still telephone call several times a month. Sophie, who teaches second grade, and John D. have a son in the Navy stationed in Norfolk and three children living in Florida, the youngest of whom graduated from college in August.

They have two grandchildren.

Jackie Gerson Lowenstein and her husband, Murray, drove to Harrisonburg and had dinner with Janie Tune Sease and her husband, Jimmy, and then went over to see the three-story log home that Jimmy and their son had built with their own hands. The Lowenstiens also spent an evening with Mary Ann Coates Edell and her husband, Don, playing bridge in Richmond. Jackie's sisters from Anne Holmes DeCastro in Germany are well full of thoughts about the reunion. It was such a delight for all of us to see her again after so many years.

Stanley and I met Betty Edmonds Dunn and her husband, Elmer, in Charlottesville last October for the Virginia-Clemson game. We had a delightful weekend together despite witnessing Virginia's first loss of the season. The Dunns' children live in Atlanta, Charlotte and Virginia Beach, and they have four grandchildren, two boys and two girls.

I called Jeanne Hootman Taylor in California to thank her again for doing such a fine job as class secretary these last five years. She made two trips to Richmond last summer, the first for the reunion and her daughter's birthday, the second for the birth of her third grandchild in August. Her other daughter, who lives in San Diego and is a lieutenant commander in the Naval Reserve, was honored in a change of command ceremony.

Class president, Bertha Cosby King, Harriet Stubbs and I will continue to keep in touch with each other so that our efforts on behalf of the class will be coordinated. As your secretary, I do apologize, however, for not sending out a letter to each of you asking for news for this first column. The Millers' lives are a little chaotic right now, having sold and moved out of our home in mid-September and not having our new house ready until almost mid-December. Stanley sold his stock in his firm and retired in October, and our Richmond daughter and her family moved to Chicago. We even changed both of our cars.

I have asked our daughter and her family who live near us not to make any significant changes for a while until we settle down a bit.

Please note our new address and send me lots of news for future pieces. I will try to respond to each letter I receive and will definitely initiate some mail and phone calls to you.

News came in last spring from Ann Barkerville Collins. She and Bob planned a trip to Europe over the summer in combination with business. They have four adorable grandchildren all living in the area and love being grandparents!

Sara Cowherd, daughter of Sara Sherman Cowherd, was promoted to senior design department manager at Backsville S-80. Daughters Anna and Jane also live and work in the Richmond area. Sara and Rush now have five grandchildren, three boys and two girls.

Best wishes to Carol Jones, who was married to Jay McNamara on Pawley's Island, S.C., on Sept. 11. Her sister, Jeanne Jones Paterson, W-58, was her attendant.

Carol is reference librarian and assistant professor at Georgia State U. in Atlanta. Jay is a librarian at the U. of Alabama, Huntsville. Both are regular vacationers at Pawley's Island.

Shirley Ward Wingfield and "Buddy" welcomed their fourth grandchild on April 12, 1992, when Laura Ann was born to daughter Sara.

It's always fun to report that a missing classmate has surfaced. Lillian Stephenson Stroud received a letter from Janie Smith Vega, who was a member of our class for our freshman year only. Janie lives in Santa Monica, Calif., and works with the Los Angeles Philharmonic. Lillian's daughter, Mary, was married in April 1992 and lives in Suffolk.

Mary Moore Mullin Mowery and Alfred have moved to Hilton Head, S.C., after 21 years in Maryland. She is happily retired and invites everyone to visit.

Helen Melton Luskard has fallen in love with England and has been there twice in the last two years. She and Dee also took a cruise to the West Indies and left their home before Hurricane Andrew struck. Helen's daughter Laurie gave the family a new grandchild in September 1991.

At the 40th reunion of the Thomas Jefferson High School Class of 1952, Helen saw Anne Stuart Hartz Garnett, Ann Carol Veaner Malcolm and Nancy Saunders Johnson.

Also looking toward retirement is Betty Lou Kendall West, who writes that this will be her last year of teaching first grade. After June 1993, she plans to travel and spend more time with her husband on their 22-foot sailboat. The travel will probably include visits to daughter Becky, who has moved to Kansas City with her husband and two daughters.

Please send me news by April 15, 1993. I can't possibly write or call all of you.

REUNION '93

The biggest news of all is our 35th reunion. Everyone is reminded of college fun, close friendships and how special our class was... and is! Come see "old" friends and the "new" campus. Much has been added, but the spirit is forever.

Suzanne Kidd Bunting is working hard to enhance the music department at UR and not without recognition. She previously received a Distinguished Alumni Award and in June 1992 was presented the Alumni Achievers Award at the annual Rectors' Club dinner. Suzanne takes time off to play with her three grandchildren, who live in Williamsburg. One is named for her. This last summer found her visiting friends in Switzerland.

Dottie Goodman Lewis came from Martinsburg to be with Suzanne when she received her award. She is the librarian at the Carlisle School and visits her Smith Mountain Lake home when time permits.

Betty Bruce Harris Bones is another of our newsmakers. The Richmond press has lauded her for her outstanding tours. Two days a week she is at the State Capitol and otherwise leads tours for the Historic Richmond Foundation. For Halloween, her "Richmond Ghosts" tour was very popular.

Betty discovered Connie Booker Moe on one of the tours she led. Connie works at the Tuckahoe YMCA and was leading a group to the "Y." We extend our sympathy to Connie with the loss of her mother, Leslie Booker, W.22, the long-time Westhampton alumnus secretary.

Betty's children are doing interesting things. Courtney lives in Bon Air and is the mother of "the cutest" granddaughter. Daughter Leslie is a pharmacist in San Diego. Son Bruce works for an engineering firm in Richmond, and Blair attends Mary Baldwin College.

Patricia Ann "Reb" Steckman Shiftlett died Sept. 15, 1992. We will miss her wonderful energy. For many years she worked in education in Chesterfield and Hanover Counties. I will always picture her in her green gym suit with the hat as she stood her ground with the sophomores. Speaking of spirit, "Reb" had it.

I hope to see you at the reunion.

Jeanette McCannies Welsh from Richmond took a two-week cruise last summer with stops in Venice, Rome, Crete, Greece and Turkey. Jeanette and Jack then motored around Northern Italy so Jack could visit important early theatres. Their daughter, Murray, a college senior, spent last semester in Bali, Indonesia, with the School for International Training, which led to a summer job with the Agency for International Development in Washington, D.C.

Nancy McCulloch Pickands from Wayne, Pa., enjoys working as head of circulation and technical services at a public library. She lives at the edge of Valley Forge Park and can walk onto a path that goes along Valley Creek, the one that gave Valley Forge its name in Revolutionary times. Her son James is a social worker in Youngstown, Ohio, and daughter Holly is a senior at West Chester U. Nancy plays tennis and travels quite a lot.

Sarah Hudgins Rice's daughter Eleanor gave birth in July to twins, named Alexander and Rachel. Sarah and Fred hosted Ben and Lynn Mapp Wiggins on a week's tour of the United Kingdom.

Lanette Ware was elected president of the International Federation of Women's Lacrosse Associations. She will succeed the current president next year at the World Cup ceremony in Edinburgh, Scotland. Lanetta now teaches tennis, golf and fencing at Hollins College.

I had a chat with Lanetta in May when our family attended graduation at Hollins. Our son Bill received his master's degree in education along with 10 other males in the masters' programs.

Jane Shapard Conroy
P.O. Box 566
Halifax, VA 24358

Those of us who attended our 30th class reunion on May 29 and 30 had a wonderful time. On Friday we enjoyed a delicious supper in the Blue Room of Keller Hall, where we looked at the scrapbook and class memorabilia.

Those classmates who attended were: Jo Anne Wortman Andrews, Barbara Davies Brewer, Bett Burrus Brooks, Nancy James Bulb, Julie Perkinson Crews, Jane Shapard Conroy, Joan Bishop Davidson, Nancy Vaughan Downey, Judy Acee Hansen, Barbara Harrell Holdren, Lilly Wampler Jarrett and Thompson Kemper.

Also attending were Shirley Easter Maize, Marsha Sullivan McCracken, Ellen Kaye November, Robin Cramme Parks, Sylvia Brown Pond, M.J. Willet Puckett, Nancy Richardson, Dianne Light Riffer, Sandra Britton Saunders and Randy Nunn Wallace.

On Saturday, there was a luncheon and a dinner with the corned schools of UR class of '62, which a few of us attended.

The following officers were elected: class president, Joan Bishop Davidson; class secretary, J.C. Shapard Conroy; class fund chairman, Judy Acee Hansen; chaplain, Nancy Richardson.

Maize is especially fond of her husband, Dave, who lives in Asheville, N.C., for 20 years. Dave is in private ob-gyn practice, and Molly has been running a property management company, Land-Lord Inc., since 1983. She was elected to serve as a director on the Asheville board of realtors and to represent this board on a state level. Their oldest daughter, Beth, is a senior at Bowman Gray School of Medicine. Daughter Lynne graduated from UNC Chapel Hill and is working on her MBA. Their son David Jr. is a sophomore at UNC.

Jo Anne Wortman Andrews enjoys retirement, especially since she's able to travel with Cecil. She spent six days at the Hillside Flea Market and "loved every minute of it!"

After 15 years, Suzanne Northam Doley still works for Colonial Williamsburg. This year she chaired the Williamsburg Christmas Home Tour to benefit the Williamsburg Community Hospital. The tour has been put on for the past 33 years by Suzanne's garden club.

Pete works for CNA Insurance and must commute daily from Petersburg to Richmond. Their oldest son Chris has been married for 5 1/2 years and lives and works in the Washington, D.C. area. Son Todd was married on Sept. 20, at the Lewis Ginter Botanical Garden in Richmond. Son Kevin is a senior at Longwood College. Suzanne is proud to report that she and Pete celebrated their 30th wedding anniversary Sept. 22.

Pam Koch Fay-Williams was moving the weekend of our reunion to Columbus, Ohio, to be with her husband, Gary. They commuted for two years as Pam was working in Minneapolis. She accepted a position as director of college counseling at Columbus School for Girls. Pam's daughter Beth, 25, is a second-year law student at Wake Forest, where she won her moot court competition last year. Martha, 24, received her master's degree in psychology at JMU and will continue for her Ed.S.

Jane Thompson Kemper shipped her son Carlton off for his junior year at Hampden-Sydney, where he majors in history. Daughter Beth works in Atlanta, where Thompson and C.B. visited her in August. Other than that, Thompson reports that it's "nursery business" as usual.

Nancy Vaughan Downey teaches at Thomas Dale High School in Chesterfield County, Va. Her son Lee graduated from U.Va. in May and attends graduate school there. Son Chris is a sophomore at Va. Tech. Nancy vacationed in Vermont this October.

Carolyn Parsley Davis is a microbiologist for the Richmond Animal Health Regulatory Lab for Va. Department of Agriculture. Her three sons are in college. Paul, pre-med, and Brian, interior design, are both seniors at VCU. Jonathan is a junior at Towson. Her husband, Dick, enjoys entertaining at home with wine and cheese and classical music parties. Carolyn enjoys horseback riding lessons and horse shows.

Sherry Radcliffe Crawford describes herself as a "domestic engineer appointed by God." She and Ron celebrated 30 years of marriage at the Tides Inn, thanks to their thoughtful young people.

Julie Perkinson Crews and Bill invited Robin Cramme Parks and Jerry for a long Labor Day Weekend, which they enjoyed in spite of rain! They celebrated the stibolin and Jerry's daughter Anne, the spring graduation of the Crews' son Russell from NC State, and the good health and positive progress of our sons in college!

Dave Parks is a Va. Tech sophomore and Carrier Crews is a senior at Elon. In September, the Crews visited Russell in Connecticut, where he is an engineer for Pratt and Whitney, and then they vacationed in Maine.

Catherine Carr Elverston is an editor at the U. of Florida, Shands Health Sciences Center Center, in Gainesville. Son Timothy is a high school junior. However, after passing college placement tests this summer, he is finishing high school at the Santa Fe Community College, where he has entered a dual enrollment program earning college credits at the same time.

Lilly Wampler Jarrett her husband, Harry, and daughter Lori visited Harry, his wife, Beth, and their children in Italy for two weeks in August. Out of Lilly's dolphin swimming came a research project. She is part of a wild dolphin project out of Radford U. and Acoustic Brain Research. It concerns the use of sound with autistic children. Lilly asked, "Can you believe I'm going to be scientific?"

Margaret Bess Taylor Sheldon and her husband have lived in beautiful Yakima, Wash., for 14 years. Margaret is in partnership with two other ladies, with whom she does estate sales and appraisals. Her husband is the legal administrator for a large law firm that does a lot of agriculture-related business. Her area is full of fruit orchards, mint and wineries. She wants us to know that wins with a Station Hills Cove Run or Chateau State Michelle label come from her vine for a large architectural firm in Yakima.

Her son David, 27, a draftsman in Yakima, is married and has two children, Melissa and Joshua. Their daughter Mary Ann, 22, began her senior year at Washington State U. Molly, 25, graduated from WSI in interior design in 1990 and is an interior designer for a large architectural firm in Yakima.

Judy Trunzo missed our reunion because she was a delegate to the United Nations Conference on the Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro. Trunz loves Brazil and had been there several years in an interior design position. She has Agency in a fast-paced job and is involved in a lot of interesting projects and meets a lot of extraordinary people. She has videotaped Coretta Scott King, Robert Penn Warren and Henry Kissinger, just to name a few!

Bett Burrus Brooks enjoyed her summer without the responsibilities of school. She traveled to Gallatin, Tenn., through the Smokies and onto Myrtle Beach, S.C. She flew to Phoenix and did some touring out West with a friend.

Betty Blankenship is the project manager for Strategy Group, a market research company working with the Republican Party. Her son Scott was married July 4, and he and his wife live in Danville, Va., where she teaches high school and he works for Tri Tel Communications in Greensboro. Her son Michael graduated from Elon in December. And granddaughter Carson turned 21 July.

Sylvia Brown Pond and Dick have had several nice trips this year, one to Aruba and another to Cancun for sail fishing. Their son Richard was married in New Jersey in February to a girl he met at Elon. He graduated two years ago, works at Pond Bros. Peanut Co. and lives in Chesapeake. Son Douglas graduated in May from Va. Tech with a major in statistics and is now working on his master's degree.

Barbara Harrell Holdren and her family enjoyed a vacation to the Olympics in Barcelona, Spain. It was the fourth Olympics for Barbara and Jim, and the second for their children. They stayed in Salore, a beach town, and rode the bus daily (1 1/2 hours) to see all the track events — Jim is a track coach — and the closing ceremonies. Barbara teaches English 11 and creative writing. Jim teaches geometry at Thomas Jefferson, Jimmy is a senior at JMU, and Cathy is working to make money for graduate school in January.

Joyce Garner retired as recreation director of Central Connecticut State U. After 26 years and moved to Provincetown, Mass., on Cape Cod.

Judith Gashford Godfrey has been living in Connecticut for 10 years and has spent a lot of time working on her home. She has one horse, five cats and 50 house plants as well as a passion for outside gardening. She enjoys her freelance design work when she gets things published.

Judy and Brian celebrated their 30th wedding anniversary with a trip to Stockholm and Madrid. They joined a Swedish friend to formally celebrate his 60th birthday in a lovely Swedish castle.

Brian is chairman and CEO of Juran Institute, a leading management consulting, training and research company. They do business in over 45 countries and that gives the Godfreys opportunities to travel.

Their son Parke is working on his Ph.D. in computer science at the U. of Maryland. He successfully defended his dissertation proposal and now must write it. Judy often communicates with Mary Godsey.

Sandra Nunn Wallace teaches 7th grade science in South Boston. Her son Dee is at NC State majoring in biology. Son Matt is a freshman at Hampden-Sydney. Last year Matt was a wide receiver on the Halifax County Senior High School football team that won the Virginia AAA State Championship. He was elected to the All Western District and Regional Teams.

Lorene DeJarnette Womble works with children in a pull-out program in Halifax County Schools for grades 4 through 7. She is also an adjunct instructor for Danville Community College. Her daughter Camie was married this fall in a small home wedding. Son Mark is a second-year student at VMI.

Joan Bishop Davidson daughter Lisa was married to Scott Goodwyn, July 25 in Richmond. Bill and I attended their wedding, and Joan looked wonderful! They live in Powhatan, where Scott works in the family lumber company. Joan teaches Latin and French in the Chesterfield County Schools. Son Todd lives in Richmond and works in a winery in Charlottesville.

I have had quite a year. My mother died May 1 at the age of 92. Our daughter Sally married Tom Gell in Halifax on Sept. 19. The entire family was in the wedding — I was flattered to be her mother of honor! Sandra Nunn Wallace was mistress of ceremonies for the wedding and Joanne Wortman Andrews and Joan Bishop Davidson attended.

Sally and Lynn live in Warrenton, where he works for IBM and she is an associate administrator for the Sunrise Terrace Retirement Home in Oakton. Our son Wirt graduated from VCU in May with a degree in art history.

Thanks to all of you for your responses. I look forward to being your new secretary. If you have any news during the year, be sure to let us know.

We have an author in our class. Susan Pepper Robbins has just had her first novel, One Way Home, published by Random House. Susan is the winner of the 1990 Virginia Prize and has been a finalist for the Flannery O'Connor Short Fiction award. She lives in Charlottesville, VA, with her husband and two sons. Congratulations, Susan!

Gayle Jones Mapp's son Slater graduated from UR last May and married a Westhampton lady in September. She passes on the news of Alce Brewer Kopitnik's marriage and move to Moorestown, N.J.

Louis Oliver Wilson was named chief executive officer of the Metropolitan YWCA of Toronto. She and her husband, Christopher, a hospital administration consultant, live in Toronto but keep the family home in Norfolk. Son Ian is a graduate student at Old Dominion U., and son Bryant is a graduate of UR.

Jackie Gates Richardson and Fields moved to Northern Virginia in May after Fields returned from Saudi Arabia. They have recovered from the shock of having to buy a place to live and are enjoying the area. Jackie continues her part-time job with Tri-System.

Elaine Johnson Yeatts' daughter Carole is a law student at U.Va., and Laura, a UR junior, received the Westhampton Class of '41 Scholarship is a Virginia Baptist Scholar. Elsa Queen Falls, associate professor of biology at Randolph-Macon College in Ashland, has been serving as secretary of the Va. Academy of Science. Elsa has also served UR as alumnae representative to the Board of Trustees and on the Board of Associates.

Susanne Bowles Royster's daughter Gray, a Sweetbrier student, enjoyed a semester of study at the U. of Seattle. Madeline Crenshaw Halls is an actuarial examiner with the State Corporation Commission. Her twin daughters are recent graduates of Sweetbrier College.

Betsy Uhl continues to work at the Literacy Center of Bucks County, Pa., helping to train up to 300 volunteers a year to tutor illiterate adults. Sally Abel Taylor's daughter Kay attends UR and loves it. Sally would like other '64 graduates with students at UR to call her at 403-830-7853 so she can look for you at UR functions.

Les and I still live in Richmond, where he is a dentist and I am a language fundamentals teacher at Riverside School for learning disabled children. Our son Brian is a junior at Ferrum College and daughter Kathryn is a high school senior.

Lots of us have never sent in news — let me hear from you. The next deadline is April 15, 1993.

Alumni in the arts

Playwright Matthew Potts discovered the power of the theatre at UR

If Matthew Potts, R'85, hadn't attended UR's high school football camp he might never have seen the school's mascot or made the decision to apply to UR.

"I was a quarterback on the high school team," Potts explains. "When I saw the campus at UR, that clinched it for me."

Of course there were other considerations that factored into Potts' decision to attend UR.

"I wanted to be a writer or in broadcast journalism," he explains. "I was told the best thing to do was get a solid liberal arts education, and Richmond is one of the best liberal arts schools in the country. I also wanted a school that had a small student-teacher ratio, and Richmond fit that bill."

Even though he started out as an English major, Potts graduated with bachelor's degrees in English, and in speech communication and theatre arts.

In high school, Potts dabbled in the theatre, he says, but it wasn't until his freshman year at UR that he decided to concentrate on a theatrical career.

"I auditioned and was cast in two shows the second semester of my freshman year," Potts says. "I had a great time doing it. If you get bitten by the theatre bug it sticks with you."

So Potts began his sophomore year with a new major — speech communication and theatre arts.

The theatre program at UR is small enough that you can do a lot of different things," notes Potts. "I could blend writing with experiential aspects, including acting, directing, technical design and writing. It was a good marriage."

Potts remembers his theatre professors with a special fondness.

"You get close [to them]," he says, explaining that they serve as both teacher and director. "During a given production, you work with each other every day for six weeks. You get to know them personally."

But one of his English professors also holds a special place in his college memories — Dr. Paul Stephens.

"He is a Milton scholar," remembers Potts. "He inspired me to gain knowledge for the sake of gaining knowledge. He helped turn my college career around."

Another English professor, not associated with UR, has also played a significant role in Potts' life. That professor is his mother.

"My mom is one of the biggest influences that I've had," he says, explaining that he wrote his first poem when he was only four.

Because writing was an important part of his life, when Potts entered the theatre program, he found it only natural to combine his two passions.

"When I got into the theatre program
I saw the power of the theatre. Writing for the stage is a type of calling. Although I write for other media, that seems to be where the adrenalin flows for me."

While he was at UR, Potts wrote four plays, with three actually being staged.
Potts was the first student writer ever to have a show — his was titled "Pre-Matrimonial Humor" — produced mainstage at the Camp Theatre.

Even though Potts is proud of his personal accomplishments at UR, one of his fondest memories revolves around a trip to the Kennedy Center during his senior year.

"It was a production called 'Hiawatha' and [UR's play] was a finalist in the American College Theatre Festival," Potts explains. Only six student shows were picked as finalists and were able to perform at the Kennedy Center.

"That cast and crew of 20 people became a pretty close family," Potts says.
He notes that the other schools participating were large universities like UCLA. "We got to show [everyone] that UR could stand up to the best in the country."

Today, Potts is chairman of the board and company playwright for the Encore Theatre Company, a group he helped found.

"I always wanted to be a writer. It's something that I'm constantly pursuing," Potts says. "'Encore!' is a part of that dream and more than something I just dabble in. I take it very seriously."

But a lucrative career in the theatre isn't always a given, he says.

"The reality is it's a tough way to make a living," Potts says. "My other projects [scriptwriting for documentaries and television] help pay the bills."

Richmond Times-Dispatch theatre critic Roy Proctor referred not long ago to Potts as "the most exciting new playwright to come down Richmond's theatrical pike since Cindy Dowda and Andy Ellis. . . ."

Potts delights in language. He gets under his characters' skins to write roles in which actors can revel. . . .

"I love language," Potts says, somewhat embarrassed by the praise.
"And I think that the English language, contrary to popular belief, is a very beautiful language."

Writing for the theatre is very different from writing for television or film, Potts says. "Theatre's power is immediate and intimate."

"An idea comes to me as a play or short story or screenplay. They are all very different beasts and I write them as such."
And Potts enjoys creating different types of characters.

"I try to be observant and pay attention to people, and I try to bring their nuances and eccentricities to the stage," he says.

His next show, "Plato's Bed," will end Encore's fourth season.

"It's a comedy satire about the government's reaction to art in a democracy," he explains. "It's set in ancient Greece as a symbol for a democratic society."

Potts drew upon his education at UR — his studies of Plato — along with the recent controversy concerning the National Endowment for the Arts to develop this play. The recent controversy seemed to be striking the same chords as it might have in 400 B.C., he comments.

There's one more reason Potts will remember UR's theatre department fondly
— it's where he met his wife, Marie Borges, W'87. They were married on May 19, 1990, in UR's chapel.

Currently, Potts' goal is to try to sign with an agent in 1993.

"My last five-year plan was to amass enough material to present to an agent," Potts says. "Within the next five years I hope to be able to make a living solely from what I write." JE

RELINQU '93
A long lost "hello" to all of my classmates — I have taken the helm as class secretary from Michelle Collins Toczko and can't wait to hear from everybody! Michelle married James Toczko in Cannon Memorial Chapel on July 11, 1992. I was a bridesmaid, along with Kimberly Hicks Ramsey and Alicia Barsanti, her maid of honor.

As a result of the annual alumnae phone-a-thon for the Annual Fund, I have an abundance of news to report:

Christine Chambers has entered the master's program in public administration at NYU and continues to work for a foundation that supports at-risk, inner-city youths in the New York Tri-State area.

Lynn Selc McGreggor teaches 5th grade at Montrose Elementary School in Henrico County with Suzanne Wheatall Casey, who teaches 4th grade.

Joan Anderson Toubill is an advertising manager and market analyst for Puller Holmes. She and her husband live in Great Falls, Va.

Jennifer Posey is an experienced staff accountant with Deloitte and Touche in Dallas, Texas.

I attended the wedding of Molly Robb and William Wood on Sept. 12, 1992, in Wayne, Pa. Molly is a program director for a regional YMCA near their home in Maryland.

Kimberly Hicks married Jay Ramsey on Aug. 8, 1992, in Richmond. Bridal attendants included Michelle Collins Toczko and Rossanna Trivolino, B'87. Kim is in her fifth year of teaching at C.R. Logan Elementary in Henrico County.

Jenn Webb is an account representative for a fine art publishing company in Trumbull, Conn.

Susan Haws has returned to Manhattan after a year in Philadelphia and is an account executive for Johnson and Higgins.

Aileen Smith lives in Reston, Va., where she is a project scientist in environmental consulting for SCS Engineers.

Melanie Dickerson lives in the Richmond area and is a property manager for Summit Management.

Congratulations to Carol McClelland Jenkins and her husband, Boris, on the birth of their first child, a son, Joshua David, on Aug. 31, 1992. Carol is a social worker in Brooklyn, N.Y., where her husband is in medical residency.

Jessica Martin graduated from Washington and Lee School and is an attorney with the Richmond firm of McSweney, Butch and Crump.

Jane Warren graduated from Mercer Law School and is an attorney with the Atlanta firm of Wasson, Sours and Harris. She saw Cathy Julius, who is a manager for Rich's department store in Atlanta. Jane also contributed that Karen McCord works for Arthur, Andersen in Philadelphia and Melanie Kintigh is in the master's program in adult education in Richmond.

Sandra Lewis lives and works in the downtown Chicago area, where she is in investor relations with Edelman Worldwide. She reports the inauguration of a Chicago alumni chapter on Nov. 2.

Virginia Allen married Ken Bussey in a small, private garden wedding on June 26, 1992. Ginny is in her fifth year with Prince George Public Schools, where she teaches second grade. She and her husband live in Hopewell, Va.

Mary Hammer-Ford, B'88, is branch manager and officer for the Oxbridge location of Central Fidelity Bank. She is the vice president for the Richmond area alumnae association for Delta Gamma sorority and is about halfway through the MBA program at UR.

Lori Anne Cumbell, B'88, is retail product and service officer for Crestar Bank in Vienna, Va. She is in the marketing department and responsible for the Greater Washington region's products and services.

Molly Welland Ford, B'88, is supervising senior specialist at KPMG Peat Marwick in Richmond. She married Trey Ford, B'88, in May. He is finishing his last year of law school at William and Mary.

Susan Mingey, B'88, is back in the Philadelphia area from Boston. She is project manager for R.G. Kelly & Son Inc. in Newtown Square, Pa.

Be sure to watch for upcoming details on our five-year class reunion this coming May 21-22. Organizers are planning a fabulous schedule and anticipating that they will be well attended. Begin your planning now and contact friends. It'll be here before you know it!

DEATHS

1925/Christabelle Lindsey Dickerson, of Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 25, 1992.

1925/Martha Lipscomb Walsh, of Gordonsville, Va., Oct. 18, 1992. A distinguished high school chemistry teacher, she began her career teaching in Winston-Salem, N.C., and Richmond. She earned a master's degree in chemistry from U.Va. in 1940 and married Robert Walsh, an engineer, in 1942. After her husband's death in 1953, she returned to teaching and was chairman of the chemistry department at the University of Virginia in 1962.

She received many honors including the distinguished service awards from the American Chemistry Society, Washington Academy of Sciences and Virginia Junior Academy of Science, and was made an honorary life member of the Academy. She also served for several years in the 1960s on the committee of examiners for the College Entrance Examination Board Chemistry Achievement Test. After her retirement, she served as president of the Fluvanna County Historical Society and the Fluvanna County Garden society; a member and registor of the Fluvanna County Episcopal Church; and a member of the Point of Forks, Va., Chapter of the DAR.

1926/Dr. Louise Fry Galvin, of Richmond, Oct. 9, 1992. She was the retired director of the former Crippled Children's Bureau of the Va. Department of Health and was a member in local and Virginia government departments. She graduated from MCV in 1930 and was MCV's first pediatric resident. She became medical director of a local Methodist orphanage and was an associate professor of pediatrics at MCV while in private practice. In 1941, she became director of the rheumatic fever program for the bureau's orthopedic division before becoming bureau director in 1947. She was honored in 1967 for her service as a member of the coordinating committee on services for the handicapped child of the Va. Council on Health and Medical Care. In 1975 she was elected president of the Speech Center at MCV. She was a diplomate of the American Board of Pediatrics and a life member of the Richmond Academy of Medicine. She is survived by her husband, William Roland Galvin, R'26.

1926/Mary Woodward Pilcher, of Roanoke, Va., Oct. 1, 1992. She taught French and Latin for the Richmond Public Schools at Chandler Junior High School from 1926 to 1930.

1927/Frances Burnette, of Culpeper, Va., Sept. 3, 1992. She was a retired personnel officer in the Soil Conservation Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture. Prior to that position, she taught school for five years in Virginia and Washington, D.C.

1927/Helen Gasser Sheppard, of Rockford, Ill., Nov. 4, 1992. She was married to the late Dr. Lee C. Sheppard, R'29 and H'58, who had pastorates in Virginia, North Carolina and Missouri. Mrs. Sheppard was a member of AAUW and the Va. Museum, and studied art throughout her life. Before her marriage, she worked at the Family Service Society in Richmond.

1928/Margaret Knight Dillon, of Rocky Mount, Va., Sept. 17, 1992. She was the widow of Judge Jesse William Dillon, who served as Treasurer of Virginia and then Commissioner of the Va. State Corporation Commission. She was a member of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, The Woman's Club, the Tuckahoe Women's Club and Commonwealth Chapter of DAR.

1928/Ann Trent Gaines, of Westhampton Beach, N.Y., June 12, 1992.

1929/Dorothy Pettus Darden, of Franklin, Tenn., February 1991.

1931/Evelyn Virginia High Begor, of Wilmington, N.C., Dec. 8, 1991.

1932/Olga Pitts DeShazo, of Center Cross, Va., July 12, 1992. She was a retired principal and schoolteacher.

1933/Ella Freeman Anderson, of Williamsburg, Va., Nov. 6, 1992. She taught English, French and Latin from 1933 to 1970. She also worked for Colonial Williamsburg in the 1970s.

1933/Carolyn Cutchin Powell, of Franklin, Va., July 27, 1992.

1935/Laura Thomasson Leitch, of Annapolis, Md., Sept. 25, 1992. She worked for the supervisor of shipbuilding for the U.S. Navy in Annapolis during World War II. After the war, she worked for the Copyright Office in the Library of Congress. She spent 10 years teaching third grade and 10 years in social work before her retirement in 1976. After retirement, she worked for the Secretary of the Maryland Senate during the General Assembly sessions. Vantage Point

.....

The Heilman Dining Center at the University of Richmond was opened several years ago, with the promise that within its walls, the student body would become united. The hope and dream was that students of all types would find common ground by eating together.

In practice, the dream has not been fully achieved. The divisions among our students have not suddenly disappeared when full lunch trays are carried to a table.

But, on any given day at any given meal, you can see one section where something of this spirit prevails. On the left side seating area, students of the sciences and students of the arts do eat together. This happens because, to a large degree, students of the sciences are students of the arts.

There is an interesting phenomenon, just as true at UR in the '90s as it was at my undergraduate alma mater in the '60s, that many science and math students are active participants in one or another of the University's arts programs. I can remember well, as a student, leaving the chemistry or physics lab for an hour to practice with the college choir.

And now, when I go to plays or to choral or orchestral concerts, I see my students playing prominent roles. In recent years, several students who have attended the University of Richmond on music scholarships have majored in chemistry as well, and now, with the first group of Ethyl Science Scholars, the reverse has happened. When the University Players presented their musical last fall, one of our science scholars had a leading role, and another was high in the rafters operating a spotlight.

Routinely, on the occasional Friday mornings when a play is presented, I will have students in my chemistry classes absent, because they are actors or stage managers or sound or light operators.

This last Christmas, when Dr. Jim Erb invited me to sing with the University Choir in their quadrennial performance of Handel's "Messiah," I found that I already knew a good fraction of the choir members, either from class or from the conversations around the tables on the left side of the dining hall.

I have thought from time to time about why there is this connection between science and the arts. I do not claim any great insights, but I do believe I know something of the answer. It has to do with some qualities of science that are matched by parallel qualities of the arts.

First among these is the dependence on symbolism.

We need both science and the arts

In chemistry, a whole language of symbolism must be learned, in order for the ideas of one scientist to be communicated to another. Students of chemistry must master the use of atomic symbols and then must learn to put them together, first to symbolize ions and molecules and other chemical species, and then to symbolize the interaction of these chemicals in reactions.

Likewise, students of music must master the symbolism of notes and staff, in which rhythm, tempo, dynamics and pitch are communicated from one musician to another.

Second, in science and in the arts, there is a strong sense of precision.

In science, the outcome of experiments is highly variable, and for results to be replicated, conditions must be precisely controlled. In music, in painting and sculpture, or in theater, there is always a degree of freedom present, but it is disciplined and harnessed, so that the expression is under control.

Third, science and the arts are both dominated by an emphasis on modeling, the result of something visualized on a human scale representing truth on a universal scale. When we present the principles of chemistry in our classes, we do so with models, saying, for example, "When atoms bond, it is something like this."

No one who has seen and been moved by powerful works of art can fail to experience something of this same effect. The paint on the canvas or the clay in the sculpture evokes a powerful reaction—the material touches the eternal.

I can still remember in the Marsh Gallery the painting of a scientist sitting in agony in confession, with a priest on the other side of the screen whose body bore a disfigurement that could only have been a result of the work of the scientist. It was only paint on canvas, but it modeled the age-old dilemma of the scientist, who bears in the soul the consequences of his or her work.

Finally, just as the study of science offers a fuller understanding of the physical world we live in, the study of the arts offers a fuller understanding of the emotional and moral world we live in.

A university lacking either science or the arts in its offerings is hardly worth the name. I applaud the plans for a new, enlarged home for the arts on our campus. My students and I will benefit greatly.

Dr. William H. Myers is an associate professor of chemistry at the University.

Make a gift you can live with

As you wrestle with your financial matters this winter, why not earmark a portion of your estate for the University of Richmond?

A bequest will tell your executor to distribute a certain amount of money to UR at your death. Of course, while you're alive you'll have immediate and total access to that money.

It's a gift you can live with.

Please call the Office of Gift Planning for more information or suggested language for your will.

Here is one course catalog the students don't get...

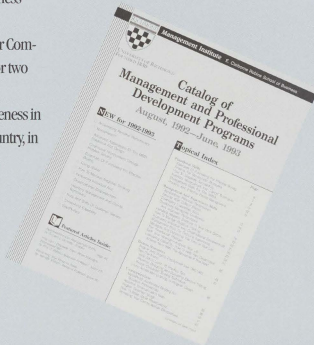

But you should. It's the UR Management Institute catalog of more than 45 seminars and training programs for business professionals.

From Finance for Non-Financial Managers, to Increasing Your Communication Effectiveness, most seminars are only one or two days in length.

Each small group seminar focuses on improving your effectiveness in the business environment. Trainers from across the country, in addition to The E. Claiborne Robins School of Business faculty, are selected to conduct these targeted topics.

Since you're not a student at the University of Richmond any more, maybe you should be? Get the catalog that the students don't get.
